Solar Eclipse Expedition at Siberian Goal

Washington. Dr. Paul A. McNally, S.J., Director of the Georgetown University Observatory and head of the joint expedition.

A month's work will go into the erection of a temporary observatory on the site which the expedition has selected near Kustanai. The instruments being set up have been transported nearly half way round the world.

The eclipse which the expedition will study will last just 127 seconds. During the month that the equipment is being put in place, the members of the expedition also will be rehearsing the swift action which will be the lot of each on June 19 when the eclipse actually takes place.

Msgr. Keegan Favors Local, State Relief

Atlantic City, N.J. Declaring in his presidential address that "a government conscious of human values must intervene in the field of welfare and relief," the Very Rev. Msgr. Robert F. Keegan, executive director of Catholic Charities of the Archdiocese of New York, told the sixty-third meeting of the National Conference of Social Work that the "Government must adhere to the only safely charted course for our Democracy, it must steer by the lodestar of the Constitution as a living thing."

Setting forth "certain principles which should guide our action as social workers," Monsignor Keegan said:

"We believe that it is the duty of government to see that the necessities of life are provided for those who lack them through no fault of their own. We should not relent in bringing pressure of public opinion to bear on governmental agencies so that our local, State and Federal governments will meet their respective responsibilities.

"We believe the administration of work programs and of relief can in the main be carried out most effectively under local and State direction."

A Story Corner For Children

By 'Cousin Ken'

A SIMPLE SEASIDE STORY

Now that so many of us are looking forward to holidays let us have a simple seaside story this week. A little boy went to the seaside with a very fine toy boat, or at least as fine a one as he could buy with his pennies.

Well off to the beach he set to sail his boat and on the way he heard two poor children sighing. "Oo there's a boat! Oo! If we only had one like that." "Seems as if we'd never be able to get a boat! Cost money they do and we never have any. If we had one like that but what's the use of wishin'?"

Gives Boat Away

Now our little boy had many toys at home, not very fine ones but quite good friends, and he thought, "Perhaps I can do without this boat after all. I'll give it to those children." And he did, hurrying away before they had time to thank him, because he didn't want them to see it was rather a wrench to part with his new possession.

Makes New Boat

But he didn't give up the idea of sailing. O, no! He found a big piece of wood, fitted it with a stick for a mast and a paper sail and quickly had it afloat. And soon an old sailorman came and watched him sail his strange craft.

"And will that be the best boat ye could man[illegible]?"

"Yes," said the boy. "I had a better one but this is a good one for floating, and I'm having lots of fun with it."

Sailor Helps

"Hm," said the sailorman, "well, it's a good enough bit of wood. Take it out of the water and let's dry it and then see if we can't make it more shipshape."

So they took the boat out and dried it in the sun, then the old man brought out his knife and some string, and whittled and cut that wood, and smoothed and shaped it and fitted it with nice masts and rigging and fine sails cut from a big handkerchief, and in quite a short time he'd made a splendid schooner out of that wood for the boy.

His Reward

"Now then, young sir, that be something like a boat for ye!" chuckled the sailorman.

"I should just think so!" gasped the boy. "Why it's ever so much better than the one I gave away! Better than I ever thought a boat could be!"

VATICAN PAPER SEES WORLD REVOLUTION

Claims Wide Upheaval Is Aim Of Communists; Review's Events

Vatican City. An editorial in L'Osservatore Romano, under the heading "Moscow Salutes the Spanish Comrades," warns against the "insistent and permanent pressure being brought to bear upon developments in political events," and directs attention to "Communist penetration in Occidental politics."

Moscow, the editorial points out, is no longer engaged in "an indirect, clandestine, extra-legal action but in clear and confessed revolutionary tactics which, in Spain and in France, have inspired the electoral organization of Popular Fronts and, at Geneva, contribute considerably to the crisis of organized society."

"All this," the editorial continues, "is confirmed by the recent publication of the program of the Communist Party for the coming year," which has "two principal ideas: reaffirmation of the need of the foreign proletariat for the world revolution under the protection of the Comintern and insistence upon the need for national organization of the U. S. S. R. in order to speed military, economic and industrial preparation so as to meet any threat."

League Action Scored

The editorial then quotes the Journal de Geneve to the effect that "Admission of the U. S. S. R. as a member of the League has deprived the League of the moral base on which the Pact rested." The U. S. S. R., the Geneva journal protests, "is not a State but a political party erected as a State."

Moscow's political activity in Spain, L'Osservatore Romano notes, can be distinguished in three distinct stages: (1) A period of pre-electoral moderation, by which the extremists of the Popular Front sought to obtain votes of the bourgeois elements of the Left; (2) A period of concession of power to the bourgeois or temperate groups of the Popular Front so as to thrust upon them responsibility for measures dispersing social assemblage; (3) A period of revolutionary realization affording incitement to a preordained disorder. Caballero, the "Spanish Lenin," L'Osservatore Romano remarks, has already announced at a Madrid meeting that "the dictatorship of the proletariat is at hand and the new regimen will not be able to establish it by pacific means but with violence."

Events in Spain, the Vatican City Daily points out, have caused some embarrassment to the Leftist press in France in that they served to impress upon French voters the unconfessed objectives of the French Popular Front. Ere Nouvelle, it is noted by L'Osservatore, has taken considerable pains to "emphasize the diversity of the two situations."

There are certain facts with regard to the Spanish situation that demand emphasis, and L'Osservatore lists them as "68 churches destroyed, 72 dead and 300 injured." "This," the editorial adds, "is the more optimistic version for, according to the Monarchist Deputy Sotelo, between February 16 and April 2, 106 churches in Spain were pillaged, 73 churches and convents were burned, about 300 people were killed and a thousand injured." When these figures were mentioned in the Cortes, a Socialist Deputy, L'Osservatore states, protested that the destruction of churches is not in keeping with the traditions of the Socialists, but that they "understand" without approving, how the churches happened to be burned." The Vatican City daily questions the extent of Socialist comprehension.

"Thus," L'Osservatore concludes, "is the grave problem of the third [illegible] phrase perfectly engineered by the Comintern."

CIVIC VIRTUE

THE YARDSTICK

CATHOLIC TESTS OF A NEW SOCIAL ORDER

By the Rev. R. A. McGowan
Assistant Director, NCWC Dept. of Social Action

TOWARD A NEW SOCIAL ORDER

The Commonweal comments well upon Bishop O'Hara's "Call to Social Justice," that statement which you must have read, in which the Bishop Chairman of the NCWC Social Action Department urged Catholic Americans to celebrate around May 15, the joint anniversary of the two great economic Encyclicals of our time: Leo's "Condition of Labor" and Pius XI's "Reconstructing the Social Order."

The Commonweal points out that catholics differ on the application of the Encyclicals to the United States and that great numbers are ignorant. Some Catholics rebel at the New Deal, The Commonweal says, because they are uninterested in social justice. Others, it says, rebel because they honestly think it violates personal liberty and the rights of private property and tends toward State Socialism and Communism; and the Commonweal says that among those who so think some have studied the Encyclicals. Others are strongly for it on grounds of the Encyclicals.

We shall always have differences among Catholics on political questions, political judgments depend not only on moral principles (which all Catholics should uniformly accept) but on grasp of facts and possibilities. But the differences here do not hinge on individual laws.

Perhaps the real difficulty is that that Encyclicals advocate action at two different levels. One is alleviatory, remedial and temporary. It embraces simple collective bargaining over wages and hours and prices, and laws to regulate competition and the new economic dictatorship. It is necessary. The second is fundamental: it is the creation and growth of economic self-government by industries and professions under some guidance from political government.

The New Deal uses largely the first method. The late lamented NRA was, even if seriously defective, a sample of the second method, and efforts are being made to revive it. "Organized Social Justice," that attempt to write an American program applying the Encyclical, for which the NCWC Social Action Department secured some 130 signers, notes this fact. It says that the laws and measures under the first method are by the nature of the case lame, and yet are necessary and good. But, it adds, unless the second method is used, we risk Fascism or Communism because mere tinkering with a rotten economic regime is not enough.

This view is not included in The Commonweal's summary. Those not interested in social justice would reject this view. But that remnant of anti-New Dealers who seek to think in terms of the Encyclical might accept it. This is apart from their judgments regarding individual laws, men and organizations. For, of course, Catholic social teaching is not tied to any political movement. The main thing is to do, and support the doing of, as much justice as is possible now in and out of governmental life, and to build and help the new social order and spirit.

M. Logan of Kentucky.

Hymns for Bands

Omaha. (NC). To meet the need for hymns which bands might play in Corpus Christi processions, the Rev. Dr. Edward J. Chapuran, pastor of St. Wenceslaus' Church here, has arranged the hymn "To Jesus Heart All Burning" and the St. Wenceslaus Choral for bands. These arrangements will be made available to all Catholic bands, institutions or organizations in need of them for the cost of postage and handling.
