BAIRD'S TAPIR.

A Common Enough Animal That Cannot Be Seen In Any Collection.

Still less known in this country, and never seen, either in menageries or museums, are the two species of tapir found in Central America. The sleek, plump bodied, chocolate brown tapir of South America we do see occasionally, both alive and dead, but of Baird's tapir there is not even one adult stuffed specimen in existence, either in this country or in Europe. A few skulls and skeletons and two or three mutilated and unmountable skins are positively all the world possesses in representation of this species, and, what is still worse, no naturalist has yet had an opportunity to even write a description of the full grown animal! The young animal is known to be of a reddish brown color, marked with irregular white spots and stripes.

Our universal poverty in specimens of the tapir named in honor of Professor Baird is not due to the extreme rarity of the animal, but rather to a lack of enterprise on the part of the intelligent white men who from time to time have had it in their power to procure and to preserve specimens. The animal is well known in Panama, Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Honduras and southern Mexico.

Although tapirs are usually found along small and well shaded rivers in the hot lowlands of the tropics, they are frequently found on forest covered mountains as well. Dr. Frantzius informs us that in Costa Rica Baird's tapir is found both in the lowlands and on the highest mountain ranges. He says also that "it is much hunted, for its flesh is very delicate. The backwoodsmen salt it, or dry it in the air, and thus provide themselves with large stores. Its thick hide is very useful. * * * Tapirs are very fond of the salt licks which are formed in the neighborhood of the numerous mineral springs by the evaporation of the saline water. Here they are either shot with bullets on moonlight nights or are hunted down with dogs and killed with spears." —W. T. Hornaday in St. Nicholas.

The Tree of Blood.

The most wonderful optical experiment known to the eye experts is that which produces the "blood tree," or "the arborescent figure of Purkinje." It is a very simple and entertaining experiment and one from which no possible harm to the eye can result. The experiment is an optical delusion in which the retina of the eye and all the blood vessels connected therewith appear to stand out in the air in such a manner that the experimenter has a splendid view of them.

Purkinje, the great optician, accidentally made this discovery of the "blood tree," or "arborescent figure" which bears his name several years ago, and since his time it has been used in thousands of curious test experiments. The projected image is called the "arborescent figure" because of its resemblance to a many branched tree and is produced in the following manner: Shut yourself up in a dark room at night and move a candle or lighted lamp back and forth very rapidly before the eyes. After a few seconds the air surrounding the candle will assume a deep pink or reddish color, which rapidly takes upon itself the appearance of a tree of blood. Over this red background resembling in all directions may be seen the veins and blood vessels standing out in bold relief, while toward the center of the figure there appears a dark trunk-like line which serves as a "body" for your "tree of blood," the trunk being most plainly visible where the optic nerve enters the eye.

This experiment is chiefly interesting because it proves that the parts of the retina which actually receive impressions and produce sensations must lie behind the blood vessels, since these cast their shadow upon it and enable the experimenter to see them as plainly as he does any other external object.—St. Louis Republic.

LORD ABERDEEN'S NOTE

An Aged Document of Great Importance.

SCHOMBURGK LINE DISCREDITED

In View of Venezuela's Protest, England Agreed to Remove the Stakes Which Marked the Line, Thus Admitting Its Error.

LONDON, Jan. 14.—The correspondent is enabled to transmit to American readers an important document bearing upon the Venezuela question, namely, the text of a letter from Lord Aberdeen, the then British secretary for foreign affairs, to M. Fostique, who at that time represented Venezuela in London, which was written at the time the posts which had been set to mark the Schomburgk line were removed in compliance with the protest of Venezuela. This letter will doubtless be given a conspicuous part in the forthcoming blue book, as it is known that the government attaches much importance to it.

While it is admitted that in a letter dated March 30, 1844, Lord Aberdeen stated that in removing the posts Great Britain had not ceded any rights, it was contended that no document was in existence making any such contention at the time Great Britain had ordered the removal, and that the removal was a tacit admission that the Schomburgk line was wrong.

Following is the letter, the authenticity of which is unquestionable:

FOREIGN OFFICE, Jan. 21, 1842.

The undersigned, etc., has the honor to acknowledge receipt of a note addressed to him on the 10th inst. by Monsieur Fostique, etc., representing the alarm and excitement which has been created in Venezuela on account of the marks fixed by Mr. Schomburgk at different points in his survey near the mouth of the Orinoco, and renewing his request that her majesty's government will order the removal of those marks.

The undersigned begs to inform Monsieur Fostique in reply that, in order to meet the wishes of the government of Venezuela, her majesty's government will send instructions to the governor of British Guiana directing him to remove the posts which have been placed by Mr. Schomburgk near the Orinoco.

But the undersigned feels it his duty to distinctly declare to Monsieur Fostique that although, in order to put an end to the apprehension which appears to prevail in Venezuela with regard to the object of Mr. Schomburgk's survey, the undersigned has consented to comply with the renewed representations of M. Fostique upon this affair her majesty's government must not be understood to abandon any portion of the right of Great Britain over the territory which was formerly held by the Dutch in Guiana.

ABERDEEN.

The letter is regarded here as an answer to the contentions of Henry Norman, special commissioner of The Chronicle, who first gave the English public, through his papers, documents which seemed to invalidate the claim of the Schomburgk line as a true boundary line.

But it is to be observed that Mr. Norman and the Venezuelan government, also, have not claimed that in removing the boundary posts Great Britain abandoned any portion of her rights "over the territory which was formerly held by the Dutch in Guiana," but simply that she had abandoned the Schomburgk line as marking the limit of that territory.

ADRIFT ON AN ICY SEA.

Terrible sufferings of the Survivors of the Steamer Ealing.

HALIFAX, Jan. 11.—A boat containing nine survivors of the crew of the wrecked steamer Ealing has reached Canso. They report the captain and seven men drowned. Another boat containing 13 men is still missing.

The suffering of the nine survivors during the four days they were in the open boat, exposed to the gales and bitterly cold atmosphere, are almost indescribable. When their boat landed at Canso they were nearly all in a helpless condition.

Every effort is being made to allay their sufferings. One man could walk when the boat landed, the rest being carried to neighboring houses and cared for.

The men state that the Ealing struck at 6 p. m. Monday in a dense vapor while going at quarter speed. Half an hour afterwards it was necessary to take to the boats, as the ship was settling fast and the sea very heavy. They were driven 50 miles to sea.

Soon after daylight on Tuesday two of the firemen succumbed to the exposure. During Tuesday night Captain Mock and a fireman named Wilson died. Thursday morning the first engineer died and later in the day three others expired. [illegible] day at noon, as they caught sight of [illegible] the ninth of their crew, [illegible] named Gilroy, died.

These were all consigned [illegible] their dead to keep the heavily iced boat from sinking and to make room for the living.

When land was sighted Gilroy died, and the gale increasing, with a prayer they consigned his body to a watery grave at the entrance of Canso harbor.
