AMONG WOMEN

Role of Mothers

By MARY LENNON SNYDER

In a leaflet entitled the Christian Mother they declare, "Mothers rule the world. They guide the destinies of homes which are little worlds. Others will never be better until mothers become better at home. That is why God is relying on mothers to keep Christ in the world by keeping Him in their hearts and homes.

"Church and school, priest and Sister struggle to form the characters of boys and girls. But each adult has far more vivid memories of what mother and dad did at home than of what Father and Sister said at school.

A priest may work for forty-five minutes trying to convince boys and girls that they should always tell the truth, even when it hurts; that they should admit when they are wrong even though they may suffer for being wrong. The same children while eating lunch at home, may detect mother telling a little white lie (they leave black marks on the soul) and in those few seconds the priest's work of forty-five minutes has been wiped out. Men and women are not the products so much of a school as of a home. And mothers set the pace at home.

"Throughout the world, lips of Christian Mothers are praying; "Mary, please help me to be a better mother" A vital prayer, because the world is what mothers are. That is why one of the Popes did not hesitate to write, "Give me truly Christian Mothers and I will renew the face of the earth."

I should like to acknowledge all the letters I have received particularly in regard to my appeal for used religious articles for the missions. Because of the season of the year which brings the re-opening of school, the additional household duties of canning and preserving and an annual bout with an allergy known colloquially as "hay fever," my letter writing has been neglected. Unlike summer fruits, unanswered letters will not spoil if they are left unattended.

The cleanest skin going

by Bernice Peck

It's bonny, a skin that looks alive, brightly alive, under a gauze of make-up—even without make-up. It's old news now that much of what is pretty or unpretty about a complexion has its origins far below the surface, the skin acting as a frank reporter on internal order or strife. If everything's tidy with your own basic apparatus, then don't let externals swipe your skin's freshness and clarity. Externals like dirt, dirt that doesn't always show but always damages. (If you had a dime for every skin that goes to bed cleansed—but only half-clean—your income tax would be astronomical.)

Dermatologists have said that probably half the lesser skin disorders they see are the result of optimistic, vague cleansing methods, the kind that remove some make-up and grime, leave behind just enough to clog those tiny exits, the pores. And these pores after a while of clogging, are, alas, no longer tiny. Then a skin's color and tone turn gloomy, it becomes more and more disposed to minor grievances, spotting, blackheads, even infections. Its owner begins to think of hers, pitifully, as a problem skin, although she herself manufactured the problem.

Actually your skin, any skin, can be flawlessly clean without an arm-long row of bottles and jars for doing daily business. It's not how many preparations you use. It's how consistently, how properly, you use three, two or even the one that does your job. As for the one, it soon might be something new called White Sable, something you'll be seeing and hearing about all over a few weeks from now. Its makers, Revlon, have had both versions of White Sable in and out of their testing laboratories for lo these three years. Object of each return trip—to make it even better, make it do even more, than the time before. Finally, they seem satisfied that each is wonderful for its particular purpose, and here, partially, is why:

It is a silky, milk-white balm that first cleanses, then softens, then protects perfectly any type of skin. Its combination of elements makes it gentler even than necessary for the dry, baby-thin skin, effectual enough for the oiliest. And it functions as perfectly for any skin on the in-between list: the normal, the easily disturbed, the undecided (that irritating combination of dry-and-oily areas). Every possible factor has been considered, from skin personality and climatic conditions to the small but sweet pleasures of actual use. White Sable goes on with a silky luxury, with a delightful fragrance. It takes a moment to do its job. You can wipe it off with tissue or wash it off with a cloth and cool water. What film remains is benign to any skin facing any temperature. That's one version of White Sable, its price, $1.50.* The other has all the same wonderful qualities plus an entirely new idea for a cleansing preparation (the addition of hormones to replenish the precious natural supply that birthdays can cost the skin). This version, $2.25.* Either is an easygoing plastic-flasked traveler. Either is not only ready—but able—to make your skin clean as can be. And a completely, constantly clean skin is only a few steps away from a beautiful complexion.
