NEW COOKING METHOD CONSERVES GAS SUPPLY

Cuts Its Consumption in Half, Both In Home and at Source

An article of cooking by "retained heat," now being sold by Natt, Bareham & McFarland, at 366 Main St East, offers high promise for the conservation of the gas supply.

By means of the so-called Chambers Fireless Gas Range, it is possible to turn the gas just a few minutes, then turn it off and do the balance of the cooking with the heat already accumulated. Special heat proof insulation seals the heat in.

This principle is applied not only to roasting and baking in the oven but also to boiling and stewing under the "Thermodome," a dome shaped hood manipulated by a chain control over the top of the range. An extended series of tests has established the fact that the average gas bill is more than cut in half by use of these devices.

It is said that approximately 40,000 homes in different parts of the country have already adopted this new method. As its use is increasing very rapidly it is easy to estimate the effect on saving of the gas supply.

Coleman Has Tire Demands

Next to oil and gasoline, the tires of the car need the most attention declare the Coleman Tire Company of No 521 Main Street East, distributors for Hewitt tires and maintainers of an efficient and quick working tire service.

Of course a machine can not run without gas and oil, nor can it run comfortably without satisfactory tires. A good set of tires often saves puncture and blow out trouble for the owners of automobiles.

'Satisfy the customer,' is the working slogan of the Coleman Tire Company which is ready to sell you high grade new tires or look out for your old ones in its service station. When a tire is brought into the workshops of this company the experts do not simple fix the obvious injury because of which it has been brought in. They look the whole thing over carefully just as does a doctor when he receives a patient. Every little scratch and abrasion is carefully examined and cared for. When the motorist receives his tire back again it is in as near perfect shape as possible. The service station maintains a service truck ready at all times to take to the road to bring in or deliver damaged or repaired tires.

If you are a motorist don't wait to be a victim. Get into connection with this and to aid erected the building which is every automobile driver on the road now occupies.

R. B. I. Began In Year 1863

Business School Started By L. W. Williams Has Grown Rapidly.

Rochester's reputation as a center of learning and the home of educational institutions owes much to the Rochester Business Institute, which this year will celebrate its sixty-seventh anniversary. The school bridges the gap between the book learning provided in the public schools and universities and the practical training required for success in business. It aims to provide both academic and professional training, and a record of its thousands of graduates, many of them now in positions of responsibility and financial independence, proclaims the success with which it has served its purpose.

A constantly widening field of training has marked the development of the Rochester Business Institute. Its curriculum is by no means confined to students who expect to be stenographers or bookkeepers. It offers twelve different courses, any one of which is designed to fit the student for the practical problems of a business career. One popular course trains the student for secretarial work, designed to meet the growing demand for trained young men and women who can handle the private affairs of big executives and professional men. Recently a course in psychology was added to this subject.

The Rochester Business Institute offers opportunities twice each month to students who wish to begin a course of study. The first and third Monday of each month marks the beginning of a term. The success of the school is indicated by the increasingly heavy enrollment. Twenty-seven instructors comprise the faculty, and two more will probably be added soon.

The Rochester Business Institute was founded in 1863 by the late L. L. Williams and quickly filled a unique place in the city's life. It still officially retains the name of the Williams and Rogers Rochester Business Institute, although generally known only by the latter part of the title. Professor John F. Forbes is principal and has devoted the greater part of his life work to the development of the school and has been largely responsible for its growth and prestige. For many years the school was situated in the old Y M C A building at South avenue and Court street, but about ten years ago portion of the Clinton avenue south building which it occupies.
