

CARROLL, BEADLE, & CO. THE GREAT CASH ONE * PRICE AND LOW * PRICE HOUSE, 144 to 154 E. Main St. Are showing new things in Silks and Dress Goods, which critics have pronounced the best in the city. All other departments are being replenished daily. The Upholstery department which has made the house famous is now in better condition than ever, and anything you can call for in house furnishings that cannot be found elsewhere at a moderate price. In fact every department in the house is now in charge of a competent hand who will insist on customers being shown goods cheerfully, no matter if only to compare and not to buy. Just at this time the Millinery and all other departments and is a booming success, all on account of the good taste shown in trimming, which of course reflects on Miss Quinlan in charge.

and no one could see him. When the giant came in he had the bodies of two men on his back. He threw down the bodies and told the young woman to get them ready for his dinner. Then he snuffed around and said: "There's someone here; I smell the blood of an Erin-each."
"I don't think you do," said the young woman; "I can't see anyone."
"Neither can I," said the giant; "but I smell a man."
With that the boy drew his sword, and when the giant was struck he ran in the direction of the blow to give one back; then he was struck on the other side.
They were at one another this way, the giant and the boy, with the cloak of darkness on him, till the giant had fifty wounds, and was covered with blood. Every minute he was getting a slash of a sword, but never could give one back. At last he called out: "Whoever you are, wait till to-morrow, and I'll face you then."
So the fighting stopped; and the young woman began to cry and lament as if her heart would break when she saw the state the giant was in. "Oh! you'll be with me no longer; you'll be killed now; what can I do alone without you?" and she tried to please him and washed his wounds.
"Don't be afraid," said the giant; "this one, whoever he is, will not kill me, for there is no man in the world that can kill me." Then the giant went to bed and was well in the morning.
Next day the giant and the boy began in the middle of the forenoon, and fought till the middle of the afternoon. The giant was covered with wounds, and he had not given one blow to the boy, and could not see him, for he was always in his cloak of darkness. So the giant had to ask for rest till next morning.
While the young woman was washing and dressing the wounds of the giant she cried and lamented all the time, saying: "What'll become of me now? I'm afraid you'll be killed this time; and how can I live here without you?"
"Have no fear for me," said the giant. "I'll put your mind at rest. In the bottom of the sea is a chest locked and bound, in that chest is a duck, in the duck an egg; and I never can be killed unless some one gets the egg from the duck in the chest at the bottom of the sea, and puts it on the mole that is under my right breast."
While the giant was telling this to the woman to put her mind at rest, who should be listening to the story but the boy in the cloak of darkness. The minute he heard of the chest in the sea, he thought of the salmon. "So off he hurried to the seashore, which was not far away. Then he took out the fish that his second sister's husband had given him, and called on what salmon were in the sea to bring up the chest with the duck inside, and put it out on the beach before him.
He had not long to wait till he saw nothing but salmon—the whole sea was covered with them, moving to land; and they put the chest out on the beach before him.
But the chest was locked and strong; how could he open it? He thought of the rams, and taking out the lock of wool, said: "I want what rams are in the world to come and break open this chest!"
That minute the rams of the world were running to the seashore, each with a terrible pair of horns on him, and soon they battered the chest to splinters. Out flew the duck and away she went over the sea.
The boy took the feather, and said: "I want what eagles there are in the world to get me the egg from that duck."
That minute the duck was surrounded by the eagles of the world, and the egg was soon brought to the boy. He put the feather, the wool, and the fin in his pocket, put on the cloak of darkness and went to the castle on the white hill, and told the young woman, when she was dressing the wounds of the giant again, to raise up his arm.
Next day they fought till the middle of the afternoon. The giant was almost cut to pieces, and called for a cessation. The young woman hurried to dress the wounds, and he said: "I see you would help me if you could; you are not able, but never fear, I shall not be killed." Then she raised his arm to wash away the blood, and the boy, who was there in his cloak of darkness, struck the mole with the egg. The giant died that minute.
The boy took the young woman to the castle of his third sister. Next day he went back for the treasures of the giant, and there was more gold in the castle than one horse could draw.
They spent nine days in the castle of the eagle with the third sister. The boy gave back the feather, and the two went on till they came to the castle of the salmon, where they spent nine more days with the second sister, and he gave back the fin.
When they came to the castle of the ram they spent fifteen days with the first sister, and he gave back the wool.

enjoyment. Then the boy gave back the lock of wool to the ram, and taking farewell of his sister and her husband, got out of the castle with the young woman of the castle, who was now his wife, bringing presents from the three daughters to their father and mother.
At last they reached the opening near the tree, came up through the ground, and went on to where he met the red haired man. Then he spread the cloth of plenty, asked for every good meat and drink, and called the red haired man. He came. The three sat down, ate and drank with enjoyment.
When they had finished, the boy gave back to the red haired man the cloak of darkness, the sword of sharpness, and the cloth of plenty, and thanked him.
"You were kind to me," said the red haired man; "you gave me of your bread when I asked for it, and told me where you were going. I took pity on you; for I knew you could never get what you wanted unless I helped you. I am the brother of the eagle, the salmon and the ram."
They parted. The boy went home, built a castle with the treasure of the giant, and lived happily with his parents and wife.—From Myths of Folk Lore of Ireland.

Traveling Stones.
Much has been written about the traveling stones of Australia, but it is not generally known that in Nevada similar curiosities are found. The stones are perfectly round, the majority of them being as large as a walnut and of an iron nature. When distributed about the floor, table or level surface, within two or three feet of each other, they immediately begin traveling toward a common center, and there lie huddled up in a bunch like a lot of eggs in a nest. Scattered over the barren region in which they are found are little basins from a few feet to a rod or two in diameter, and it is in the bottom of these that the rolling stones are found.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

A Japanese Decoration.
A new decoration is announced by the emperor of Japan in celebration of Emperor Jimmu's coronation 2,550 years ago, the distinguishing feature of which is the kinshi, or golden fish hawk or kite device. The legend is to the effect that during Emperor Jimmu's conquest of eastern Japan, when his fortunes were at a low ebb and he had sustained several successive defeats, the sky one day became suddenly darkened, hail fell and a tobi of a golden hue settled on the emperor's crossbow. The bird throw off a brilliant light, the soldiers of the opposing army were struck blind with the glare, and the emperor was victorious.—Chicago Herald.

How a Child Solved a Poem.
A West Chester child, aged about 4 years, was given a large apple by his father, and taking it to his grandmother, an aged lady, offered her half of his treasure.
"I cannot eat it, my child. I have no teeth," she exclaimed.
The little one thought for quite awhile and then went to his play room, found an old set of false teeth with which he had been playing and returned smiling with the teeth and apple. He thought he had found a certain solution of the problem; and was displeased to learn of his failure.—West Chester News.

Where There Is No Peace.
"What piece are they going to sing next, sir?" asked Rollo at the church on Sunday morning.
"You mean, Rollo," replied Mr. Holliday, "what selection. Peace, Rollo, is something quite unknown among church choirs."—Boston Transcript.

To purify a room, set a pitcher of water in the apartment, and in a few hours it will have absorbed all the respired gases in the room, the air of which will become purer, but the water utterly filthy. The colder the water, the greater the capacity to absorb these gases.

Frightened Off by a Parrot.
A burglar, while ransacking a house in Chicago, was greeted with a "Hello, there!" in a sepulchral voice from the gloom of a recessed corner. He stood not upon the order of his going, but went at once. A pet parrot had worked in its sole stock of English with admirable results. The burglar dropped a pilfered overcoat in his haste to get away, but he subsequently recovered from his scare sufficiently to enter two other houses, where he secured several overcoats and $40 in money.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Raising Other Progeny.
We often read remarkable stories of motherless squirrels and rats being raised by sympathetic female cats, but in Tarrant county, Tex., an eagle raised a young pig that weighed over forty pounds. A short time previous the same eagle raised a small lamb. The eagle's wings measured nearly eight feet from tip to tip.—Texas Herald.
