SOLD HIS SKELETON.

A FREAK WHO CAN DISLOCATE HIS JOINTS WITHOUT DIFFICULTY.

How He First Discovered His Peculiarity. Working It for All It Was Worth to Avoid Tasks—In Great Demand at the Hospitals.

A freak, who is in no sense of the word a fake, is Charles E. Hilliard. He dislocates his joints and replaces them at will to the great astonishment of the many visitors.

"I was born at Martinsburg, W. Va.," he began, "on Aug. 16, 1857. I grew up to a schooling age the same as any other child.

"He twisted me and hammered me, and found a lot of new places that could be broken without pain, finally giving up the puzzle with the consoling theory that there was a screw loose somewhere.

"As I grew older I found there were few joints in my body that I could not dislocate, and it gradually got to worrying me.

"I now began to get used to being on exhibition through having so many doctors experimenting with me, and resolved to accept one of the many offers that kept pouring in upon me to visit medical colleges throughout this country.

"College work pays me best, though. I get $150 a week at a college or where I am now, but I have worked as low as $75 in a museum just because I wanted a change so much.

greeting of, 'Well, Hilliard, how much for your bones today?' 'They're $8,000 today,' said I, laughing.

Mr. Hilliard has never known what it was to be ill, and is in perfect physical condition. His disjuncting and rejoining are done quickly, and among many others include the following dislocations, which will give some idea of his peculiar formation.

HOW TO DRESS CHILDREN.

The Material Should Be Fine, Although the Style May Be Very Plain.

The maternal pride that prompts all mothers to dress their children as well as possible under adverse circumstances also induces them to spend many an hour over their clothes without begrudging either the labor or time.

A little thought will soon settle this part of the task, which is the simplest. Blouse suits of the cottons imitating flannel; lawn tennis flannel, which is part cotton, and all wool blue and white flannel and serge are the most comfortable of play dresses.

Nainsook for gimps may be had ready tucked, or the white embroidery can be used. Separate gimps are advocated, as they are easier to wash.

Any dress to be made over for a young girl can have new sleeves, yoke and skirt border of tartan plaid woolen goods, cut bias.

The houses of rich Mexicans are said to be palaces, and the grounds around them are gardens.

The present vicar of Melton Mowbray, England, has discontinued a venerable custom. By an old charter the vicar of the parish is authorized to sit in the church at a specified time and at a specified table and collect 2 pence from every married parishioner and 1 pence from every unmarried parishioner.

Never allow yourself to be awakened in the morning. Go to bed early enough to have your sleep out. It is very injurious to get up day after day with your sleep unfinished.

Professor Forster, of Breslau, has had 200 cases of affected straight due to the disturbance of the circulation caused by wearing tight collars.

Real and Stage Proposal.

"They talk about realism being rampant in later day stage productions," said a man who leaned over the back row of seats the other evening, and by that he proclaimed himself a theatrical rounder.

"I tell you there's only just one way to propose to a girl—I've had experience, and know: You've got to get mighty affectionate and snugglesome before hand, and before you spring the important question you've got to get her waist in chancery, as it were, while you patty-cake palms with the disengaged hand.

Dignity Without Fun in the Senate.

To preside over the senate is one of the least profitable and least interesting occupations a public man can have, especially when he has not the right to vote, but only to sit as a figure head—a symbol of authority.

Ingalls, it is said, used to stick pins in his legs now and then on such occasions when he felt himself getting drowsy.

A Porter Who Sees the Seamy Side.

"It was dat bald headed ole man w'de yellor chin whiskers," said the colored porter of the Pullman car, with regretful cadence, as he leaned against the water cooler and fanned his heated brow with a soiled towel.

"De ole wretch wot giv me fo' cents He's gwine to git off at Ro'way, and see'd him dallyin' wid seben quarters few minutes ago, and done gib him half dollar brush. 'Deed I did. Brush his hat and coat and scratched nine mull spots off his obercoat, and den he pull out dem fo' cents, and says he, 'Sorry po'ter, I ain't got no mo' change.' I kid tell you," added the porter with a soul weary look.

And then, with the air of a man whose reward is not in this world, the saddened porter went back into the car and told a little man with red whiskers to stand up and be brushed.—New York Tribune.

The Tabardist.

"My cousin is in business in New York on Broadway. He has to work rather hard, but he gets a good deal of fresh air." "What is his business?" "He is a tabardist." "Oh, I see." That dialogue would describe euphemistically the occupation of walking up and down carrying an advertising board on the breast and another on the back.

These Before Him.

The hungry guest at the nearest table was beginning to lose patience. "How long have you been here?" he asked a waiter who was passing, but over nothing.
