Auburn Catholic Eleven Defeats Geneva 14-6

AUBURN.—After a first period land battle, the Purple and Gold gridders of Holy Family High School, took to the air and triumphed over the St. Francis De Sales High School of Geneva by a 14-6 score.

A long aerial, Quinn to Rhodes, brought the ball up to scoring position for Jack White to plunge over the line for six points. Connor then split the uprights for the seventh point.

DeSales got air-minded in the third quarter and when Holy Family tossed the pigskin, Reale of Geneva snared it and scored six points for some clever work. This interception accounted for all of Geneva's points.

Auburn got even in the fourth quarter when O'Connor intercepted a Geneva pass and galloped to a touchdown. He also kicked the extra point, ending the scoring for the day.

Joe Emperor, Quinn, White and O'Connor, all did some fancy ball-carrying for the Holy Family team while Bob Nelson, Tom Hickey, Butch O'Hara, "Shorty" Gonya and Dusty Rhodes stood out in the locals' forward wall. Fullback Venuti and McDonald were the consistent ground-gainers for DeSales.

Aquinas Points For Hobart

The Irish lads from Dewey Avenue will stack up against the Freshmen of Hobart College this Saturday afternoon at the Edgerton Park Stadium.

The Irish will seek to continue their streak against the Hobart Greenscappers. They defeated them 3-0 in '37 and 14-12 in '38. But both teams played hard football in these frays. Saturday's encounter should give the fans a true picture of the Irish. They have had a chance to get the "feel" of the game and with Maggio at the center slot, will be at its full strength.

Nuosa and McOmber displayed real ability last week in the 13-0 loss to Canisius, and with the rest of the line just about ready to click, the lads from Hobart should go back home without the bacon for the third straight year.

Little Joe Pentras stole the thunder last week as he did most of the Aquinas yard-gaining. He nearly broke loose last week, but after eluding three would-be tacklers, he was nabbed from behind. This run was the best of the day.

Fine defensive plays were turned in by Audycki who brought down Derringer in midfield with open territory ahead of him and by Maginn who gave some very good accounts of himself at the tackle post.

Saturday is the day for the Irish to really show their wares. The whole team should be due and once they get underway, the '39 edition of Maroon and White will be right up with the leaders.

Faith, Stories For Little Ones

ST. BERNARD'S VICTORY OVER TEMPTATION

It is related of St. Bernard, that on one occasion he allowed his eyes to rest for a short time with some degree of curiosity on a parcel of the other sex. Although he was not conscious of anything more than a passing curiosity, he had no sooner reflected on his fault than he was touched with remorse on considering the danger he had run, and severely reprimanded himself for his indiscretion.

Whereupon, to punish himself for this fault, as well as by way of remedy for the future, he ran at once to a pool of water, and, though it was the depth of winter, cast himself into the half-frozen pond, where he remained so long, that the natural heat of his body was wellnigh extinguished by the cold.

This generous act was well rewarded by God, who from that moment not only extinguished in him all motions of concupiscence, but bestowed upon him the gift of that tender and ardent love of Jesus and Mary which breathes forth in all his words and writings. LIFE OF ST. BERNARD.

We must not, however, be contented with watching over our eyes that they may not rest on dangerous objects; we must use a like vigilance as regards the tongue that it may not utter, and as regards the ears that they may not listen to any indecent word or expression.

What can be more unworthy of a Christian than that the tongue which is made to sing for ever the praises of God, and which is consecrated with the Blood of Jesus Christ in the Holy Communion, should be polluted with filthy and obscene language? And what can be more dangerous to the soul than that the ears, by which wicked thoughts so easily enter into the heart, should be open to the voice of the devil, speaking the foul language of hell by the mouths of his children?

For those who are in the habit of speaking immodest talk are truly the children of the devil, corrupting and destroying souls.

Avoid carefully the company of those who give way to this detestible habit, for depend upon it, if you go with them you will soon become as wicked as they are. If you hear any immodest word by accident, or among those in whose company you are obliged to work, turn a deaf ear to it, and raise your heart by some short prayer to Jesus or your Blessed Mother.

Often it is well to begin to speak of some other subject, by which you both show your dislike of such wicked talk and are able to prevent our dear Lord from being offended.

Fr. Laudenbach Will Address Club, Oct. 16

Regular monthly meeting of Social Justice Club of Rochester will be held Monday evening, October 16, in Old Saint Mary's Church Hall, South Street, at 8 o'clock.

The Rev. Henry B. Laudenbach, M.B., LL.B., pastor of Saint Louis' Church, Buffalo, and spiritual director of New York State branch, Catholic Central Verein of America and a personal friend of the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin of Royal Oak, Mich., will be guest speaker.

Plans for action in regards to the recent ruling of the National Association of Broadcasters which forbids the purchase of radio time for discussion of "controversial issues except under certain conditions" will be discussed as it is regarded by this Club to be the first step in the silencing of the radio priest, Father Coughlin.

Final plans for the celebration of the birthday of the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin will also be made.

This Time It's Real

A SHORT STORY

By Marie Mayer

"I know it, I feel it. This time it's real."

A heavy sigh escaped the lips of fifteen-year-old Carol Woods as the radio singer finished her song. "This time it's real." How perfectly those words described her feelings about Eddie, their new paper boy! What mattered now that red-headed youngster who sat opposite her in school? or the clerk at the corner grocery store? Right now the world centered around Eddie. "Gee, his hair is so nice and wavy and his brown eyes are so dreamy. He's lopel"

While Carol was thus in the midst of her reveries, Jack barged into the room. Jack was Carol's seventeen-year-old brother and, like all boys that age, was quick to note a change in the atmosphere.

"Hey, small fry," he asked as he plopped on the sofa, "why that dreamy look?"

"Oh, you!" Carol retorted in a tone filled with disgust, "you wouldn't understand." And then, forgetting Jack and climbing to "Garbo-level," "I am experiencing the joys of true love." With a sweeping gesture of her arms she rose and waltzed out of the room. Amazed, Jack followed her with his eyes and then cried weakly, "Mom, oh mom, I don't think Carol feels so good."

Meanwhile Carol had "climbed aloft to her boudoir" with the intention of rearranging her coiffure. Like all smart young ladies, she knew the trend of hair styles was decidedly on the "up and up."

Just as she had the last curl pinned securely to the top of her head, the doorbell rang. Frantically Carol called, "Mother, mother, I'll answer that." Down the steps she ran, two at a time, then paused at the bottom to regain her breath, and incidantly her composure. Graciously she advanced to the door to open it. There stood Eddie.

Looking at her with his eyes as wide open as possible, he stammered, "Hel-lo, Carol."

Carol, blushing right up to her highest curl, answered, "Hel-lo, Eddie—here" — handing him the money for the paper.

Absent-mindedly Eddie pocketed the money and then, with his eyes cast down and digging his toe under the door sill, he stuttered, "Uh. Carol, uh, Jimmy Stone—you know Jimmy—well, he's having a party next Saturday night and I—I—wondered (and then raising his eyes to meet hers)—could you—would you go with me?"

Trying desperately to conceal some of her enthusiasm (a trick "borrowed" from her older sister) but failing utterly, she exclaimed, "Oh, Eddie, I'd love it!"

"Would you," Eddie cried gleefully, "I mean—that's swell. I'll call for you about seven. Is that all right?"

"Oh, that's wonderful," Carol breathed, "I mean, that'll be fine."

Then, more confident by reason of his recent success, Eddie announced, "Well, I gotta go finish my route now. See ya next Saturday."

"Okay, Eddie, bye."

"So long, Carol," he called and whistling, ran down the walk and hopped on his "bike."

Slowly Carol closed the door and then, bursting into song, she dashed up the stairs and into her mother's room where Mrs. Woods was cleaning.

"Mother, mother," she cried wildly, grabbing her mother's hands and swinging her around, "mother, Eddie asked me to go to a party with him and I told him yes." Then suddenly she stopped and said quite seriously, "I should have asked you first before I told him I'd go, shouldn't I?"

"Well, yes, dear, you really should have," Mrs. Woods answered gently, "but I guess it's all right, Eddie's a nice boy."

"Gee, mom, thanks," Carol said smiling and then recapturing her former mood, jumped on her mother's bed and asked, her chin propped in her hands, "I wonder what dress I can wear."

Promptly at 7 o'clock the following Saturday, Eddie appeared at the front door. Mr. Woods answered it and ushered the ill-at-ease youngster into the living room.

"Stepping out tonight, eh, Eddie?" Mr. Woods asked genially.

"Yes, sir," Eddie answered, standing, meanwhile rubbing a strangely-clean finger under his collar.

"Well, sit down a while. Carol will be ready in a minute."

"Thank you, sir," Eddie muttered and sat down stiffly on the edge of the sofa.

A few minutes later, Carol entered the room, a picture of girlishness in a pink taffeta "party dress" and a little white cape. Eddie rose to his feet and swallowing hard, said, "Gee, Carol, you look beautiful."

About 11 o'clock Carol and Eddie returned. Bidding Eddie good night, Carol walked into the living room where her mother was sitting, reading. Laying the book aside, Mrs. Woods asked Carol as she sat down beside her, "Did you have a nice time, dear?"

"Oh, mother, it was grand, really," Carol answered. "He's so handsome and so wonderful!"

"Eddie, you mean?"

"Eddie!" Carol exclaimed incredulously. "Oh, no, mother!" And then dreamily—"I mean Jimmy's cousin. I met him tonight at the party! And mother, honestly, this time it's real!"

'Catholic Book Week' Planned

October 17-23 has been set aside as "Catholic Book Week." During this time plans are being made to acquaint not only school children but adults with good Catholic literature.

The Catholic schools of the Diocese have been invited by the Superintendent, Rev. John M. Duffy, to interest pupils and their parents in securing Catholic books for the school or classroom library.

Church societies might be interested in subscribing to a membership in the Pro Parvulis Book Club for the school. The Pro Parvulis is a Book Club for American Boys and Girls, directed by Priests, Sisters, and Laity.

The Editors send to members six of the finest and most inspiring of the new books being published to each age-group every two months, accompanied by a copy of "The Herald."

There are four groups: group 1, for boys and girls up to advanced grades; group 2, for boys in advanced grades through early high school; group 3, girls in advanced grades through early high school; and group 4, juniors and seniors in high school.

The Editors of the Club judge a book by the permanency of its influence upon the lives of the young members: its durability, interest, literary style and format. Subscription for one year is ten dollars for each group.

'FULL CONFESSION' FILM VIEWED BY HIERARCHY

LOS ANGELES—The Most Rev. John J. Cantwell, Archbishop of Los Angeles, accompanied by several prelates, attended the preview of the film "Full Confession"

"I believe this picture deserves a special word of commendation," said the Archbishop. "The theme centers around the seal of Confession and the intricate delicacy of the situation is admirably portrayed. Theologians may disagree on a few minor points, but as entertainment for the general public it is outstanding even in a world of entertainment."

Forty singers from the Church of the Blessed Sacrament in Hollywood are featured in the production, the work of RKO-Radio Pictures.
