Word comes from Santa Fe, N. M., of the acquisition by one of the citizens of that place, Thomas B. Carron, of an immensely valuable library. It formerly belonged to Father Augustine Fischer, once the private secretary of Emperor Maximilian, and consists of nearly three thousand volumes, chiefly on matters Mexican, and the Mexicans have expressed regret that a library so rich in "Mexicana" should have gone out of that country. Besides many rare works by Mexican and Spanish writers, there is a considerable number of manuscripts and autographs.

A piano has been donated to the Rev. Father Conrardy, of Molokai, and he writes that he is in great need of music of a simple character—such as will please the lepers—viz., dance music, owing to its vivacity, compositions with bright melodies and easy operatic airs, says a correspondent of the San Francisco Monitor. I therefore earnestly request any institution or private individual who has such pieces to spare, to kindly send the same to Father Conrardy, begging them to bear in mind that classical or difficult compositions will be useless. Donors will obtain information at the post-office or from carriers, as to postage. Please remit to Rev. L. L. Conrardy, Kalawao, Molokai, Hawaiian Islands, Laysan Mission.

DIOCESAN NEWS.

Greece.

Sunday, July 6th, was a memorable day for St. John's parish. People came to church with immense expectations. They knew great preparations had been made for the occasion, it being the First Communion day of the children. Heaven had bestowed the finest weather, and crowds gathered early to fill the beautiful church. Among them were many from the city and neighboring parishes. At 9 a. m. the First Communicants went in procession from the new school building to the church. They were 16 in number, but with the youthful candle-bearers at their side, they formed quite a respectable procession. Immediately following came those communicants of former years, who heeded the pastor's advice in making the day a spiritual renewal of their First Communion day. The children were well drilled and thus exhibited an impressive spectacle. All ceremonies were performed with edifying decorum and much grace. It had evidently been very good that the pastor had kept the communion class the three previous days constantly under his personal training. There was another notable feature. A new choir had been started by the immediate efforts of the pastor for the production of genuine church music, and we witnessed its first and very creditable productions on that day, including a festival chorus specially prepared by the pastor for the occasion. Among the singers we noticed the most highly respected members of the parish. The altars showed an astounding amount of live flowers, so that there seemed to be no possibility of placing any more to the honor of the divine friend of children. Very appropriate were therefore the words of the pastor in his address: "Dear children, you are gladdened at the beautiful aspect which the altars and the entire church affords. You know that all this is the work of willing hearts and eager hands that came to prepare all things so well for your day of honor and of blessing, and that could not be set at rest even when the clock had struck the midnight hour. You recognize so great kindness and you are thankful. But, dear children, all human kindness is merely a faint ray of the goodness and mercy of God, who in His unspeakable mercy deigns to come to you Himself to day in Holy Communion. Must you not then be above all grateful to God? Must not your gratitude needs surpass all human considerations?"

STATE INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

Fourth of July Celebration Address by Bishop McQuaid.

Independence Day was appropriately observed at the State Industrial School. In the morning the boys paraded on Lake avenue; clad in the military uniforms, they presented a handsome appearance and were the recipients of much applause. Among those who witnessed the boys' evolutions were Very Rev. Mgr. De Keyser, Revs. J. P. Kiernan, Fridolin Pascalar, W. H. Harrington. The latter is the devoted chaplain of the Catholic boys and girls in the institution.

Shortly after noon the boys were marshalled in the yard and President William Purcell spoke a few words about the character of the day, and thanked the kind friends who had shown their interest in the work of the institution by being present. He then said: "There is one here who has made some little sacrifice to be present. He has come thirty miles for the purpose of addressing you. I doubt if he could have been induced to come that far to address a company of adults. But he has put himself out to come here. I have great pleasure in introducing the bishop of Rochester."

Bishop McQuaid spoke substantially as follows: "I readily accept the kind invitation of the president of the board of managers to come here to-day and say a few words that might help and strengthen you; that might give you an ambition for the future. You are boys; so were we once; our life has passed along; most to old age; we have a home; you, too, will have a home; just as you choose to make it. I came here also to speak on a great day—our national holiday—the day that makes every American boy's mind brighter up." The Bishop then sketched the war of the Revolution, and said of those who took part: "They were a clear-minded, God-fearing body of men. They were industrious and self-reliant. No power on earth could forever crush 3,000,000 of such people. They rose against despotism and, because they conquered, were able to give this glorious country to us. A country of the people and for the people. They laid down principles, which, if followed, would give growth and strength to it. They established principles of order. I do not care what association it may be, whether it be the family, business establishment, church, printing office, or what not, it must be conducted on principles of order; there must be rules and laws to go by. Who is more bound than I? My mind and the service of my body are yielded to those with whom I come in contact. Whenever men come together, this rule of order is above all other." Next the speaker touched upon the War of the Rebellion, and speaking of the rebels, said: "They, in their madness, wished to break up this united land, which God and our forefathers gave us." He then went on vividly to sketch the great struggle made by men who wished to guarantee the unity of this republic and to secure this country against the importation of princely and royal power. "Now I see before me many citizens who will be a credit to the country. You will have to be like those who shed their blood for the country. There is no room for worthless idlers here; no room for those who disregard the laws of God and man. This America is essentially a country of freemen, in the best sense of the term. Every boy expected to become such a man." The Bishop then went on to speak of the Industrial School and said that he
