CENTURY

"COLONEL EFFINGHAM'S RAID"  (Adults) 20th Century-Fox. Carried mainly by the old trouper Charles Coburn, this version of Berry Fleming's novel drags at times because the stars, Joan Bennett and William Eythe, must be given a chance to shine and there is really little room for them at all. Coburn as Colonel Effingham, retired soldier, who becomes a local crusader against political graft in the cosy town of Fredericksville, is at his blustering best. But he has to bluster too much and too long. Kathryn Scola, who wrote the film, Lamar Trotti, its producer, and Irving Pichel who directed it, have all done much better work, but it adds up to passable entertainment in which everything except the politics smells nice and clean.
