DEATH COMES PAINLESSLY.
A Scientific Opinion That Will Be Consoling to All Humanity.

The signs of impending death are many and variable. No two instances are precisely identical, yet several signs are common to many cases. Shakespeare, who observed everything else, observed and recorded some of the preliminary signs of death also. In the account of the death of Falstaff the sharpness of the nose, the coldness of the feet, gradually extending upward, the picking at the bedclothes, are accurately described.

For some time before death indications of its approach become apparent. Speech grows thick and labored, the hands, if raised, fall instantly, the respiration is difficult, the heart loses its power to propel the blood to the extremities, which consequently become cold; a clammy moisture oozes through the pores of the skin, the voice grows weak and husky or piping, the eyes begin to lose their luster.

In death at old age there is a gradual dulling of all the bodily senses and of many of the mental faculties; memory fails, judgment wavers, imagination goes out like a candle. The muscles and tendons get stiff, the voice breaks, the cords of the larynx are loosening. Small noises irritate, sight becomes dim, nutrition goes on feebly, digestion is impaired, the secretions are insufficient or vitiated or cease, capillary circulation is clogged. Finally the central organ of the circulation comes to a stop, a full stop, and this stoppage means a dissolution. This is the death of old age, which few attain to.

Many people have an idea that death is necessarily painful, even agonizing; but there is no reason whatever to suppose that death is more painful than birth. It is because in a certain proportion of cases dissolution is accompanied by a visible spasm and distortion of the countenance that the idea exists, but it is nearly as certain as anything can be that these distortions of the facial muscles are not only painless, but take place unconsciously. In many instances, too, a comatose or semi-comatose state supervenes, and it is altogether probable that more or less complete unconsciousness then prevails.

We have, too, abundant evidence of people who have been nearly drowned and resuscitated, and they all agree in the statement that after a few moments of painful struggling, fear and anxiety pass away, and a state of tranquillity succeeds. They see the visions of green fields, and in some cases hear pleasing music, and, so far from being miserable, their sensations are delightful. But where attempts at resuscitation are successful the resuscitated persons almost invariably protest against being brought back to life, and declare that resuscitation is accompanied by physical pain and acute mental misery.

Death is a fact which every man must personally experience, and consequently is of universal interest; and as facts are facts, the wiser course is to look them squarely in the face, for necessity is coal black and death keeps no calendar. — Medical Journal.

She Caught the Car.

She was a very masculine looking young woman, and if she had not worn a Psyche knot and skirts she might have passed for a slim wadded youth, for she wore a man's collar, a man's coat, a man's four-in-hand tie, and displayed on her bust a longitudinal section of a man's plaited shirt. She was waiting for a car in the storm the other evening. She had not an umbrella, and was in the shelter of a doorway. A car dashed by, and she whistled for it to stop. The driver paid no attention to her signal, and she gathered up her skirts, made a dash out into the street, ran sharply for a moment, caught up with the rapidly running car, caught the hand rail, and swung on as nimbly as a college athlete. "What do you mean, sir," she exclaimed to the conductor, "by not stopping when I signaled?" The conductor tried to explain, but she would not listen, and sat down and looked indignant for ten minutes. It takes a mannish looking young woman to chase a car through the rain and get aboard without stopping the car. — Boston Advertiser.

Ananias and His Deaf Father.

Dan'l was the biggest liar in town and Dan'l always appealed to his father to verify his fearful yarns. Dan'l's father was old, a little deaf, and belonged to the Methodist church. It was not to be supposed that the old gentleman would indorse lies, and thus the neighbors concluded. But here is how Dan'l got around his poor old dad. "Went down to brook yesterday," Dan'l would relate. "Caught tew hundred and four pick'ril, say, didn't I, dad?" And the old man, benignly listening, would hear "four" and meekly reply, "Yes, Dan'l." — Then the able liar would edge around "back to" his father, and with the edge

About Opening Safes.

As a matter of fact you can't open a safe lock by listening to the click of the tumbler. They do not click. They are immovable in their places and do not drop. Consequently, when I read of an inexperienced plumber boy who opens combinations at will—it fatigues me. Now I have the reputation of being able to open almost any safe, but if the safe is locked I can't do it. I can go to the safe, as it stands unlocked, and can gently turn the combination until the resistance warns me that I have reacted a tumbler. I note the number and proceed in like manner with all the tumblers. Then the owner can lock his safe, and I being in possession of this combination can unlock it without difficulty.

Had I been placed before the same safe while locked, I might turn until doomsday without success. Now the various makers invariably send out their safes set on certain numbers. I, knowing these numbers, can unlock any one of them before the owner has adopted his own peculiar combination. My safes go out each with a separate number, of which I keep a careful record, so that I can open them in case I am called upon to do so. I have a safe now which is locked, and the combination lost.

I am just as unable to open that safe as you, although I know every detail in the lock's construction. There it stands until I see fit to drill it open. A safe with two tumblers is susceptible of 10,000 changes; with three tumblers, 1,000,000 changes; with four, 100,000,000, and so on in regular permutation. But give me as a clew one number of the combination employing two tumblers, and I will have to make but 100 combinations from 1 to 100 in order to open the safe in from two to five minutes' time. The only absolutely burglar proof safe is the one employing a screw door with a time lock attachment on the inside. — Interview in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Facts and Fancies.

When we attempt to show how far matter can be divided the brain refuses to grasp the infinity. A pin's head is a small object, but it is gigantic compared to some animals of which millions would occupy a space no larger than the head of a pin. These tiny animals must contain organs and veins, etc., and those veins are full of blood globules. Professor Tyndal informs us that a drop of blood contains 3,000,000 red globules. So these infinitesimally small animals must have millions of globules in their blood also. Thus we see to what an extent, far beyond our senses' power to grasp, matter can be divided.

But there is something even more astonishing than this. It is stated that there are more animals in the milt of a single codfish than there are men in the world, and that one grain of sand is larger than 4,000,000 of these animals, each of which must be possessed of life germs of an equal amount, which would grow up as it grew to maturity. This carries us back again, and of his hand measure out the length of his arm before the eyes of his astonished guest. "Caught one pick'ril, a whopper, longer'n that, say, warn't he, dad?" The old man would gaze upon the six inches of scrawny wrist and forearm as wily Dan'l whirled and measured for his benefit and humbly but firmly assert, "Yes, my son; sh'd say as how he was summat longer." — Lewiston Journal.

The World's Paper Mills.

The production of paper in the entire world is estimated to be 3,000,000,000 pounds per year. There are 884 paper mills and 1,106 paper machines in this country. Germany has 809 mills and 891 machines; France, 420 mills and 535 machines; England, 361 mills and 541 machines; Scotland, 69 mills and 93 machines; Ireland, 13 mills and 13 machines; Russia, 133 mills and 137 machines, and Austria 220 mills and 270 machines. — Philadelphia Record.
