Recommend Religion In Public Schools

New Canaan, Conn. — (RNS) A subcommittee of the Board of Education recommended in a report submitted here that religion be included in the curriculum of New Canaan public schools.

"It is proper to teach about religion in the public schools provided sectarianism is avoided and respect for the religious viewpoint of others is emphasied," the report said.

Public school children should know about "the vital part" religion has played in the history of the United States, the subcommittee said, and should learn the "common spiritual values" held by Americans.

Edwin Eberman, board chairman, said that the public schools have been "ignoring the challenge of a worthwhile subject by permitting minorities to whittle away at any teaching of religion."
