DOINGS AT THE DALY'S

Sure-Fire Moneysavers

By Mary Tinley Daly

The exchange of pill econo[illegible] has occasioned in this column seeking for "How to" in the way of saving food [illegible] that prodigable for those at [illegible] house. Hope you've found help too.

We've picked up cut-corner ideas that have resulted in an actual decrease in the weekly marketing doll[illegible] a tale that is getting crowded with good-tasting, [illegible] nutrition and low cost recipes.

Best of all, through correspondence, we've made a lot of new friends and what's more than that?

Tonight, we put into practice a suggestion of Mrs. J. R. (Bernice) Wood of Rochester, N.Y.

It's one that a friend gave her for a "cup dinner." After a weekend of entertaining and with leftovers from several nights before cluttering up the refrigerator, we found ourselves with this and that and not enough of any one thing to make a full family dinner.

FOLLOWING Mrs. Wood's suggestion, we put each item into a cup or small baking dish—used the big drip pan from the bottom of the oven. Cups containing bits of ham, creamed chicken, spaghetti and sauce, mashed potatoes, succotash, beef stew, carrots, squash, sauerkraut, creamed chipped beef.

Those dishes and dishes that plagued us until Mrs. Wood's letter arrived. Now while the cup dinner was heating, we made a big tossed salad, heated garlic bread on the top shelf of the oven, set the whole thing on the table and called our Irish family to enjoy "storgasbord."

Mary Daly

"Say," somebody remarked the minute grace was finished, "This is the kind of dinner that you get dressed up to go out to!" (To end a sentence a preposition with . . .)

There was the delight of decision, and a splitting of cups so that everybody had variety unknown in the usual prosaic dinner. And nobody hinted it was a kitchen clean-up. As marketeer, we pocketed the savings with a thank-you to Mrs. Wood.

Another tip from Mrs. Wood who is the mother of Cathy, Eileen, Sheila, Christine and Virginia . . . This was contained in the P.S. of her letter and I'm sure it will strike a familiar note to all of us.

"One sure way to save on the food budget," she wrote, "is to leave your husband home while you shop. Mine is always getting cans of salted cashews, fancy cheese crackers, sour cream, etc., throwing them into the basket as we go along the supermarket aisle."

Amen, Mrs. Wood!

THE HEAD of the House has a penchant for fancy sauces and regardless of how many half empty bottles we have, he keeps adding more every time we go to the grocery store together.

"We haven't had any of this for a long time," he will say, "and it perks up anything, even scrambled eggs. So we have sauces, not only for the goose and for the gander but for everything one could conceivably consume. And he goes for the other luxuries—the fancy cheese crackers and salted nuts, just as Mr. Wood does.

We go ahead and play the game with him, let him toss whatever he wants into the basket . . . same way his grandson Sean does, though we're able to sneak Sean's donations back onto the shelf before check-out time. But one can't be quibbly with a growing man.

And at the check-out stand, one can't gracefully show the slightest surprise as the nonchalant clerk rings up 79 cents for this, 98 cents for that, $1.10 for another non-necessity. How those luxury items make a carefully prepared grocery list soar. With a gulp and a gasp one can see them chalked up on that unrelenting cash-register.

There's one way, of course, to get at least a part of your grocery money back . . . go to the store by yourself and return a few bottles of the super de luxe sauces!

Rebholz - Hart Wedding Held

Patricia Ann Hart, daughter of Mr. and the late Mr. Leon G. Hart, and David Carroll Rebholz, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Rebholz, were married Oct. 11 in St. Charles Borromeo Church.

The bride's brother, the Rev. Leon G. Hart, C.S.B., was principal of Aquinas Institute, performed the ceremony. The bride was given in marriage by another brother, Edward L. Hart.

Mrs. Albert McEntee was matron of honor for her sister. Bridesmaids were Mrs. Francis Neidert and Miss Ruth Stefod.

William Plumb was best man and ushers were David Hart and Francis Neidert.

Pope's Message To All

By Mary Lennon Snyder

On August 29 of this year His Holiness, Pope Pius XII, addressed the Second International Congress of the Third Order of St. Dominic at Castel Gandolfo. After addressing himself to the members of the Third Order and exhorting them to follow the example and teaching of their Founder, St. Dominic, the Holy Father addressed the group in words applicable to all Catholics.

Mrs. Snyder

"You belong to an age that sees the triumph of the machine and its tremendous accomplishments, an age of powerful and social organizations, an age in which the economy is subject to the irresistible movements of life and change.

"Without losing any of its serenity, and always conscious of the spiritual weaknesses of men which remain unchanged by all this outward activity, the Church urges its faithful to intensify their interior life by accepting its austere but irrevocable conditions.

"YOUR MEMBERSHIP in the Third Order put you immediately in a position to insure this through the study of the Christian life more necessary than ever in a world threatened by its own inventions.

"Our attention is drawn to you as a group of chosen laymen particularly suited to devoting yourselves to the service of the most important objectives of the present-day apostolate. This is the thought we wish to touch on briefly, since it is the main theme of your Congress. . . .

"To cultivate the spirit of faith as is required of you by your vocation as Dominican terciaries, you must devote a large part of your life to prayer.

"We know that usually it is not possible for you to consecrate long hours to contemplative exercises. But with the faithful observance of the pious practices outlined in your Rule, you must be careful to cultivate an interior state similar to that of a contemplative Religious, that is to say, continuous attention to the things of God, a cultivated taste for silent meditation, a fondness for the Divine word found in the Scriptures and in the liturgical offices.

"Today the letter and spirit of the Sacred Scriptures are translated more exactly and with precise and beautiful commentaries. The treasures of the written words of the Fathers have become increasingly more accessible in excellent scientific and popular editions.

"The research of biblical and spiritual theology has increased and there has been a multiplication of studies of the relations of various Christian groups to the concrete problems of laymen engaged in the apostolate. You can and you must contribute such progress as is useful to the Church, the value of which will doubtlessly be all the more obvious in the years to come.

"THE ORDER of the apostolate properly understood is the conversion of yourselves through a ceaseless battle against all that places an obstacle to the full development of your life in Christ and your carrying its discovery to others.

"You are invited to do this by the formula so dear to the sons of St. Dominic: 'Contemplata aliis tradere,' communicate to others that which is contemplated. The living of the evangelical life in oneself is the best means of carrying it to others. On this point our task becomes extremely difficult, dear children. We do not hesitate to admit it.

"The Holy Father then went on to list the difficulties presented. These I should like to present in a subsequent column.

"The address delivered so recently has, as I noted previously, not only a particular application for the Dominican Tertiaries, but also a more general one for all Catholics.
