Mother Britt Aids Future Empress

A former teacher at Sacred Heart Academy, Rochester, helped rescue Michiko Shoda, futur Empress of Japan, from a flock of reporters and photographers that were harrying her.

Mother Elizabeth Britt, assistant supervisor of the girls school on Prince St. in 1945 and now president of Sacred Heart University in Tokyo, Japan where Miss Shoda graduated from, told this story to an NCWC reporter.

PRIOR TO THE official announcement of the engagement of this Catholic university alumna to Crown Prince Akihito of Japan, Miss Shoda and her mother sought the grounds of Sacred Heart University to escape from Japanese newsmen.

Pursued by the reporters and photographers down the halls of the school, students and instructors at the university, including Mother Britt, surrounded the Shodas and brought them out of the arms reach of their pursuers.

After six hours of persuasion, the reporters and photographers were persuaded to leave the university.

MOTHER BRITT, who taught the future empress, also stated following the official announcement of the engagement:

"I feel privileged in joining my good wishes to those of the whole nation in congratulating His Imperial Highness, the Crown Prince, on his own choice of Miss Michiko Shoda.

"Queenly in every sense of the word, Michiko-san has a heart of gold, a keen intellect, a ready wit and a sense of responsibility not always found in today's youth.

"With a Crown Prince capable of discerning such true values, not only Japan but the whole world should rejoice. It is very gratifying to know that this match has as a foundation the strong ties of reciprocated love, stronger than which is no earthly power.

"The faculty, graduates and students of the university join me in offering our sincerest congratulations."
