No More Topsies

"Science has not discovered a substitute for a mother's inspiration . . ."

So declared Dr. Wernher von Braun, father of America's first satellite, at a lecture before the Women's Forum on National Security.

Dr. von Braun told how his mother had given him his first telescope, sensing even then her boy's interest in science. "Her encouragement had more to do with the shaping of my life than any other single factor," said this German-born top scientist.

TOUCHING on the world today with realistic, not fanciful, plans for interplanetary voyages, the eminent scientist said:

"If ever there was a period when the affection, inspiration and guidance of a mother could help her child's development, it is in this, the troubled age in which we live."

He then went on to say that it is time for parents to re-evaluate their own place in their children's education. For too long a time, Dr. von Braun believes, parents have passed over to the schools responsibilities which are primarily those of the home.

His thought is that with the ever-heightened need for teaching the hard core of mathematics and science, the schools should be allowed to assume their true function and be relieved of duties that are not academic.

Impact of Dr. von Braun's words was felt throughout the audience.

Lately the charge is frequently brought against schools, that they are "teaching too many frills."

The "frills," if one may call them that, must be taught: how to get along with people, sex education, how to drive a car, even "how to behave on a date." Parents have wrung their hands, bemoaning precious time spent in schools for such courses.

Dr. von Braun, seems to me, has in his clear thinking way set the picture straight.

SUCH THINGS — frills, if you will — are functions of the home. If parents turn their children over — physically, mentally and spiritually — to the schools, somebody has to undertake the task of making youngsters acceptable members of society. They can't be allowed to be Topsies and "jes' grow."

Group activity, however well planned, has its limitations. In the last analysis, it comes back to the family—to the fundamental, "The family is the basic unit of society."

This sociological principle means little until we bring it down to cases: your Joe—Frank or George — and your my Jack and I, have the privilege and duty to guide, to the best of our abilities, those entrusted to our care. It is we who know by constant, loving observance, the strengths and weaknesses of each of our children. By trial and error, we learn how best we can encourage each to reach his or her potential. It's an assignment to challenge a diplomat.

Outside factors mitigate against us quite often — trend of the time, what "everybody is doing" . . . But, it's still up to us.

To paraphrase Dr. von Braun's statement: neither science, nor anything else, has discovered a substitute for a father's and mother's inspiration.

Maryknoll Nuns In Korea On 'MD International'

The medical work American-born nuns and nurses are doing in Korea will be highlighted for 10 minutes on a color television program to be rebroadcast on Feb. 22.

Entitled "MD International," the program will be seen in Rochester on WROC-TV, Channel 5 at 5 p.m. on Sunday.

The film opens with pictures of the work of the Maryknoll Sisters in Korea. In the war-ravaged city of Pusan, Korea, American-born and trained women doctors and nurses, members of the Maryknoll Sisters, care for as many as 1,000 patients a day.

"MD INTERNATIONAL" received unprecedented praise from TV critics, the viewing public, members of the medical profession and the clergy when it was originally presented in January, 1958.

Gene Lockhart Stars On Marian Theater

Gene Lockhart will appear on Marian Theater in an original story, "The People's Choice from 10-10:30 p.m. on Sunday, Feb. 22, 1959.

"The People's Choice" is a political drama concerning a man who acted as campaign manager for his best friend who was running for mayor. A heart attack suddenly claims Claude's friend, and the party asks Claude to run as alternate.

Claude is shocked to suddenly discover the foul politics behind the platform upon which his friend has been running. Despite his overwhelming ambition to be elected mayor, he exposes the entire platform to the public and throws it into their hands. But in bringing about the expose he feels certain he will lose the election.

"The People's Choice" was written for Marian Theater by John T. Kelley, with music composed and conducted by Harry Zimmerman.
