Mr. President-In the name of the city of Albany, one of the aldest on the rolls of municipal government in this country, a city that witnessed the beginning of that concord of action among the American people which has developed into the mighty government of which you are now the distinguished chief magistrate. I welcome you. To your kindness we are indebted for this opportunity, even briefly, to show again the respect for consti tuted authority and that hospitality toward those who wield it, which Albany has shown to so many of your illustrious predecessors in the office of president. We regret that your sojourn with us is to b so brief; but we trust that at some time it may be the privilege of Albany to proffer to you'its hospitality in more ample measure than this too short half hour has made possible. The rovernor of the state of New York has expressed the wish to join with Albany in its preeting to you today and I have the honor to present him to you. GONERNOR HILL'S SPEECH. Then Governor Hill stepped forward and, when the cheering at his presence subsided, spoke as follows:
