Philosopher Says

Sanctity, Human Growth Must Go Together

"To deal in a fully human way with creation is to be holy." So the new spirit of "Christian worldliness" was interpreted by Father Robert Johann, S.J., for the student Sisters at Catherine McAuley College. As one of the featured speakers at the College orientation program in September, Father Johann, philosopher and teacher from Loyola Seminary in Shrub Oak, drew on his knowledge of the "new breed" gained from his experience with seminarians and as a former visiting professor at Yale University.

Father Johann pointed out that good will and generosity alone are not enough today: training and formation are vital to enable the Christian to make an intelligent response to his vocation. The Jesuit priest highlighted some of the challenges and problems of today: the meaning of responsibility, of community, of the "new worldliness," of the strong sense of history's role in shaping human institutions.

The question of responsibility, Father Johann means not only being responsible for our actions, but also seeing these actions as responses to others: "does my act really fit this particular need?" Previously, responsibility consisted in conforming to certain established regulations; now, we are not merely responsible for our conduct in relation to a pattern, but even for the pattern itself — for the institution or community which is a human invention.

Even sophisticated Yalemen discuss the idea of community, not unlike seminarians, he noted. We each need other persons in order to be persons, we need a community to mediate love; yet the structures of a given society may not now be adequate for today's needs.

And given the new spirit of involvement in this world—the relevance of the Christian and particularly of the religious community in the world, must be examined.

There are no cut-and-dried answers to these problems, the philosopher admitted. This is a new experience for us Catholics; and as experiment and adaptation go on, there will be mistakes: the price of using freedom, Father warned.

The College orientation program began with an address by the Dean, Sister Mary de Pazzi, who suggested growth in ecumenical love as a goal for the year. A panel discussion followed, conducted by six teaching Sisters who came back for the occasion to say, "Make good use of now, because you need to be prepared for anything!"—teaching a C.C.D. adult-training program, participating in Operation Headstart, explaining problems to parents, discussion with other professionals, or taking over a nursing-training class, as well as the responsibility of a teacher to the students.

On same evening at 7 p.m. the members will respond to the Rosary to be recited by Paul Hastings in St. Francis of Assisi Chapel, Orange St. at Whitney St. which is broadcast over WSAY Radio.

United Campaign Kick-Off Luncheon

Robert S. Scheu, President and Director of the Marine Trust Company of Western New York was the guest speaker at the 1965 United Campaign Kick-Off luncheon on Wednesday, September 29. The 1965 drive for $609,418 was officially opened with this noon meeting at the Mark Twain Hotel.

Covey Hoover, General Manager of the Elmira Star Gazette, served as chairman of the opening luncheon which over 200 volunteer workers, agency board and staff attended.

Also participating in the program were William A. Tryon, Campaign Chairman, and Fred Purdue, Pilot Campaign Chairman who announced the results of the pilot program completed by selected industries and businesses. Monsignor Leo G. Schwab gave the invocation and benediction. David Goff of the Chest Public Relations Committee was in charge of luncheon arrangements.
