Here's How

DeSales Enjoys Mini-Course Day

Geneva — Teachers and students of De Sales High School think they have come upon a good thing. On Nov. 23 they had what they called a Mini-Course Day.

The purpose of this day was to expose the students to topics they don't meet in the regular curriculum, Sister Kathleen Kircher, teacher-chairman of the event, explained.

"To assume that secondary education offers a broad basis of knowledge is lunacy," she said. "To deny the student further experience outside of the academic sphere is criminal."

Local professionals joined De Sales teachers in short courses labled Business Management, Computer as "Artist," Insurance and You, Confrontation with Modern Music, ceramics and journalism.

The theory behind the mini-course day is that it can bridge the gap between the teenage world and the careers and occupations of adults.

Teachers and students agreed that the strong point of this day was the change from dictated courses to material chosen out of real interest.

Sister Kathleen cited the students' participation as proof of enthusiasm and said, "In this age of apathy, that alone should not be dismissed lightly. There were few absentees even though ample opportunity was there for any student who desired to leave. In short, there was sustaining interest.

"If we, as educators, think the day was a benefit and if the student council agrees, then a mini-course committee should be formed, a faculty member with a lightened load along with several students should have the task of organizing regularly scheduled mini-course days. Then we can say that something has been done — that the student is really the center of our concern."

An automatic dishwasher. Who needs it?

No one, really.

Certainly every one of us could survive without one. Until just a few years ago, we were doing quite nicely washing our dishes by hand. Because there was no other way.

That's the point. There is another way; times have changed. And so has your lifestyle.

An automatic dishwasher has become one of those things that, once you have one, you never want to be without one again.

The funny thing is, people who have dishwashers bought them for convenience. Do they know all the other good reasons for having an automatic dishwasher? (Maybe they don't even care).

A Neater Kitchen.

Like a dishwasher keeps a kitchen neat, because dirty dishes can be loaded and shut out of sight, until a full load is collected. A dishwasher works most economically at full or nearly full capacity.

And how a dishwasher gets dishes hygenically clean? They are washed in 140 to 160 (degrees Fahrenheit) water and they are sanitized. Families find they get fewer germs because fewer germs are passed around.

More Help.

And one more thing. It's a lot easier to get the rest of the family to clean up after their snacks and quick meals when they know they won't have to wash their dishes. Even doing the dinner dishes is no longer such a time-consuming chore with an automatic dishwasher.

So who needs an automatic dishwasher? Like, we said, no one. Not even you. But necessity is not really the issue, is it?
