Cardinal Cooke Visits Rochester Diocese

Cardinal Cooke and Bishop Hogan, seated at center, are flanked by Msgr. Gerard Gefell, a colonel in the Army Chaplain Corps, and his twin, Msgr. Joseph Gefell, retired from the corps to the pastorate of St. Alphonsus. Other priests gathering for dinner after the cardinal's Mass include about 30 who have been service chaplains.

Father Elmer Heindl, most decorated of World War II chaplains, carries the American flag while Msgr. Joseph Sullivan raises the Papal banner to join the procession in Auburn.

Pope Scores Terrorism

Castelgandolfo [RNS] — Pope Paul, expressing shock at recent acts of terrorism, declared that it was "madness" to pretend that justice and brotherhood can be effected through violence.

Addressing pilgrims and tourists in the courtyard of his Summer residence here at noon on Sunday, Aug. 11, the Pope specifically referred to the "recent moral and social trauma" caused by the "murderous criminal" bomb attack on an Italian train on Aug. 4 in which 12 persons were killed and 48 injured.

ALL IN THE FAMILY

A niece and nephew came visiting last week and brought with them four baskets of blueberries (among other bounty) sent by their father who has a friend in the fruit and vegetable business.

It was as if we had been given baskets of semi-precious gems. The first night I made blueberry pancakes. The next morning I searched through my Betty Crocker cookbook and made blueberry muffins for breakfast.

"These are good," said niece Lynne pointedly, "but blueberry pies are even better."

I got the message which already had been taking form in the back of my head.

I wondered, not too idly, if I could squeeze enough out, for blueberry cobbler too which is what my Mom always made with the tail end of the berries we had picked.

Berrying? Was there any pursuit of childhood as rewarding and satisfying?

In June, armed with the little silver pails that Gram used earlier in the year to catch the maple sap (I think lard came in them originally) we would set off for a field marked by daisies, and buttercups and Indian paint-brushes, to eat and pick, pick and eat.

None of the gargantuan, tasteless things that pass for strawberries now in the market. The wild ones were tiny and red and so sweet.

In July and August we would go to Cherry Springs and pick blueberries from low bushes along side dusty dirt roads. These were not as sweet as the strawberries and consequently more would find their way home. Cherry Springs was too far to walk and we'd have to wait until after supper for my grandfather to take us in the car. I can still feel the warm dust under my bare toes.

Blackberries, ripe in mid-August, were the most satisfying crop of all. You could fill a lard pail in no time with the luscious, juicy berries half as big as my little finger. The best places we all knew were where timber had been cut not too long before.

There was no stooping to pick blackberries but it was necessary to wear long sleeves and pants if one didn't want to be scratched from head to toe. And there was one other problem. The bears loved the berries at least as much as we did, as my Dad rediscovered one fine evening near dusk while blackberrying with Mom. I can't remember many details of that incident but I doubt there was much contest as to who got the picking rights in that particular spot.

I think every so often now of the advantages our children have that we never did. But they have never gone berrying except in a truckfarmer's patch where you pay as you pick. And that I think is a very sad thing.
