Ray Tette, director of Camp Stella Maris, and Florence Mauro, the camp's new program director.

Stella Maris Hires First Program Head

Florence R. Mauro has been hired as the first full-time program director of Camp Stella Maris, the 56-year-old institution on the shores of Conesus Lake.

Miss Mauro, a graduate of St. Anges High School and SUC Brockport, has been the head of the outdoor education program at BOCES 1 School in Fairport for the past seven years.

According to Raymond N. Tette, executive director at the camp, Miss Mauro's responsibilities include year-round program development, generating new ideas and programs for summer encampments, fund development and promotion of camp programs.

In the past five years, the camp has extended its operating season to year-round. Retreats, youth group activities, school programs, and parish council meetings are among the activities booked at the camp during the winter.

On the Right Side

Everything's Not All That Bad

A sad friend lamented: "The Church in our diocese has gone down the drain since Vatican II." It does seem so. St. Bernard's Seminary closed last June. The Carmelite Monastery in Waverly is defunct as well as the Capuchin in Geneva. The Sisters of St. Joseph have dropped from 963 in 1962 to 617 in 1982, the Sisters of Mercy from 458 to 285. Each community has a dribble of vocations for replacements as Sisters depart for heaven. Major seminarians studying for the priesthood total a mere 16 for the four-year course. Becket Hall has a total of 12 men for Rochester. There are 53 retired priests today, and 11 more will be put out to pasture by the mandated 70-year retirement age.

However, there is a cheerful side. Although canonical religious life has weakened, the spiritual life of much of the laity is more vibrant since Vatican II.

Saturday noon April 26, I was at Notre Dame Retreat House in Canandaigua. The weekend retreat had a house full of earnest men on retreat from Hornell, Perkinsville, Cohocton, Wayland, Canisteo, Rexville and Bath, plus a few individuals not with the parish groups. Msgr. Maney and his associate, Father Zimmerman, and Father Paul Schnacky were there to share lunch with their parishioners. And two pastors, Fathers MacNamara and Sweeney were there making the retreat with their men, which is edifying.

The Cenacle in Rochester is booming. Catholic high schools thrive. Cursillo has had a dynamic impact on the spiritual life of the laity, moving many to a vital participation in the work of the Church undreamed of 30 years ago. Teen seminars have introduced solid spirituality to youth. Renewal programs from the soul of Father Chuck Gallagher have stimulated hundreds. Marriage Encounter has deepened family life. The Charismatic Movement, despite some excesses and errors, has brought God's Spirit pulsating in many souls, and a love of the Scriptures.

Some Catholics, especially young ones, have stopped going to Mass. But that's always been so; and I think most will return. However we must face the fact that conditions are harder today: from pot and alcohol; from anti-Christian "Values Clarification" courses which have stalked into the public schools. (cf. Wall Street Journal: April 12, 1982). Planned Parenthood degeneracies are propagandized with tons of money. TV ads seduce to adoration of the flesh. Yet, consider, for example, that we have 1.2 million Knights of Columbus with their monthly magazine, Columbia, a model of fidelity to the Church and nation going into 1.2 million homes each month. We have 300,000 Catholic Daughters and Daughters of Isabella, loyal laywomen to counterbalance the vocal few who snipe at the Pope and the Magisterium. We have a new order of priests, Legionaires of Christ, who have the ardent spirit of the Jesuits who transformed a staggering Church in the 16th and 17th centuries. We have the international Opus Dei quietly strengthening the Church.

The Church has hard times ahead, but also good times. For example the parish in which I am in residence presents a hardy Catholicity with literally hundreds of parishioners, men and women, involved in Cursillo, CCD programs, Prayer groups, Renewal, Marriage Encounter, Legion of Mary, Teen Seminars; plus the parish committees and the big July Country Fair.
