The regular meeting of Branch 82 held Tuesday evening, was one long to be remembered by the members of that branch.

Pres. Bruckel had since the previous meeting, solicited subscriptions among the members for the purpose of procuring a banner. The members of branch 62 L. C. B. A. were present at the meeting having been invited for the occasion. After the regular business had been transacted, Miss Louise Meyers, president of branch 62 L. C. B. A. stepped forward and in a very neat, little speech formally presented the banner to the branch. President Bruckel accepted it in behalf of the branch and also invited the guests and members to partake of refreshments which had been provided by the committee. The members of the branch were present in full force as well as the C. L. B. A. members and the good feeling which exists between the two branches made it one of the pleasantest and largest gatherings ever held in the rooms. Among the large assemblage were noticed the familiar faces of Grand Vice-President Kinney, Supreme Representative Whalen, State Deputy Ernst, District Deputy Schell, and Chas. Bayer. All were called upon to address the gathering. The blessing of the banner will take place next Sunday afternoon.

Amusements.

Manager H. R. Jacobs inaugurates the second season of the Cook Opera House on Monday night next with a grand scenic production of Walter Sanford's powerful melodrama, "My Jack." An entire sixty foot car load of splendid scenic effects will be used, and the company engaged for this performance is one of exceptional strength and ability. The attraction is one of especial merit, and draws warm encomiums from the public wherever seen.

Enoch Arden, the sterling emotional actor, will present "Eagle's Nest" at the Academy of Music all of next week. Associated with him in the cast will be Frank Loese, and Marion Elmore. It is now some four years since Mr. Arden has appeared in this melodrama. It was shelved temporarily for the reason that the actor's contracts compelled him to produce some other plays such as "Night and morning," "Raglan's Way," and "Barred Out." Although Mr. Arden has made money out of his latter productions, the fact remains that "Eagle's Nest" has been his best play, both artistically and pecuniarily. Its action is more rapid, its scenes are more cohesive, its characters are better drawn.

The Osborn House is now open for the reception and accommodation of guests. Having been recently enlarged by the addition of eventy handsome and spacious rooms, single and en suite, and the entire house having been thoroughly repainted, refurnished and refitted, the "New Osborn House" is now one of the handsomest and most commodious hotels in Western New York; fronting on the Genesee River, within two squares of Main Street, and within five minutes walk of the Four Corners; its location cannot be excelled either for beauty or convenience.

FACTS ABOUT THE SAUSAGE.

How One of the Most Universal of Culinary Products is Made.

What is a sausage? The principle of making all sausages is similar, and consists in simply chopping or mincing the particular kind of meat employed and seasoning it with spices or herbs of various sorts, bread crumbs, egg, salt or mustard or any of those ingredients mixed in such proportions as are agreeable. Then the whole mixture is inclosed in portions of the prepared intestines of a hog, sheep or calf, scrupulously washed and scraped until immaculately clean.

Among the herbs employed for seasoning are shallots, onions, leeks, sage, thyme, garlic, marjoram and parsley, and in some kinds of sausages, besides meat, anchovies, oysters and red herrings are added. Finally the blood of various animals, as the ox, pig and goose, is used, mixed with oatmeal, bread crumbs and seasoning of various kinds. These in England are known as blood puddings, but the Americans as resolutely refuse to eat blood puddings as they do to partake of the hare. Bologna sausages are shrewdly suspected to be made of the flesh of the ass, but they can be successfully imitated by making a mince of equal parts of pork, veal and lean beef.

Then there are the tasty little Lyons sausages, of which the only fault is that they are too highly flavored with garlic. The Persians made a very palatable sausage of the meat of a loin of mutton, chopped up with an equal quantity of bacon or the fat of a sheep's tail. The mince meat, after being seasoned, is not stuffed into a skin, but rolled into an oval form, round a small iron skewer and the sausages are then roasted between two banks of hot ashes, the skewer being carefully turned during the operation. The famous sausages of Mayence, in Germany, are made of pork cut into small dice and seasoned with pepper and saltpeper, and these, when filled into the skins, are smoked in the chimney for forty-eight hours over, of course, a wood fire.

Germany has for centuries been the rival of Italy in the production of these historical viands. From different parts of the fatherland, and especially from Frankfurt, Mecklenburg and Hamburg, come a vast variety of sausages, beginning with the "Wurstchen Garnirung," which are very little sausages used for garnishing vegetables or other dishes. The meat for them must be minced to a pulp, and if the flesh be veal 85 per cent. must be fat, bacon and white bread crumbs soaked in milk. Then there are tongue sausages, into the flavoring of which powdered cloves enter largely.

The Germans are undoubtedly experts in sausage making, and almost every district in the country has its own favorite flavor of spices or herbs, but the addition of bread is not much patronized by German sausage makers and it is considered to detract from their goodness. Sometimes, however, it is thought desirable to use it—first, because it renders the sausage less rich, and next because it increases the bulk. To six pounds of meat no more than a pound of grated bread is allowed. In every case the bread must be moistened with cold milk or water and must be added before the mincing process is half completed.—London Telegraph.
