Chicago Woman Indignant at Editor Stead's Writings.

CHICAGO, Dec. 28.—Editor W. Stead, created a sensation at the joint meeting of the women's clubs of this city at Keating hall. The meeting was called by the Chicago Woman's club to confer upon plans to aid the suffering poor women and children of the city.

Nothing was more objectionable to any one who paid any attention to the teaching of the gospel than the fact that the conventional judgment about reputable and respectable people was quite foreign to the Christian idea.

Who were the most respectable women in Chicago? They were those who had been endowed by society and Providence with all the gifts, all the opportunities and who lived entirely self-indulgent.

These women, who had great opportunities only to neglect them, were more respectable in the eyes of God and man than the most abandoned women of the streets.

Mr. Stead's derogatory language was something stronger than that quoted above.

Many of the ladies present were exceedingly wrathful over the editor's remarks, and the meeting after Mr. Stead withdrew was very stormy.

Nothing was done, however, and no resolutions concerning Mr. Stead's remarks were adopted.

After the meeting many of the women declared that under no circumstances would they again attend a meeting at which the Englishman was present.

GALLOWNS IN SIGHT.

PRENDERGAST MUST ANSWER FOR HIS CRIME.

The Jury After One Hour's Deliberation Returns a Verdict Recommending That the Prisoner Be Hanged. Prendergast's Piteable Exhibition of Cowardice His Mother Almost Prostrated.

CHICAGO, Dec. 30.—Prendergast, the murderer of Carter Harrison, will be hanged for his crime. The verdict of the jury has said it and the people of Chicago approve it.

Ahly defended as the assassin has been, the jury has found him sane and demanded that he pay the highest price for his offense against the law.

Nothing since the commission of his crime has so irritated Prendergast as the comparison between himself and Charles Frazier. He has resented it with energy and scorn, as though the assassin of Garfield was a foul and creeping thing compared with himself. But in the courtroom he finally showed that one trait existed in common between Gutten and himself.

He proved himself an unmanly miserably coward, a creature who would have, life at any price under any conditions, anywhere, anyhow, only let it be life.

When Clerk Fitzgerald arose to read the findings of the jury the prisoner stood clutching the back of a chair, his long bony fingers nervously clasped and clasped the back of the chair, his knees trembled violently, his face was dusky, and his spiteful looking mouth opened and closed as though he would say something but lacked the power to speak.

When the jury find the defendant, Patrick Eugene John Prendergast, guilty of murder in manner and form as charged in the indictment, and fix the penalty at death.

Fitzgerald's voice clear and calm, read out the finding and the penalty with a slight emphasis on the final word.

Then Prendergast revealed himself the utter coward. His face turned pale, he opened his mouth to speak, but only a faint murmur came from between his hot and quivering lips. He moved slightly and would have fallen to the floor, but for the assistance of a bailiff.

When the jury was polled he listened with avidity to each and every answer to Judge Brentano's question. "Was this and is this no your verdict?"

It was repeated by every other juror, and then hope and the last vestige of courage faded in Prendergast's breast.

He was half carried back to his cell, where he threw himself upon his bunk in the attempt to hide from his fellow prisoners, whose expressions of satisfaction over the verdict were more emphatic than graceful and more sincere than polite.

When the mother of the prisoner heard of the verdict she uttered a wailing cry clinging to the banister for support, as she saw the prisoner's brother, John Prendergast, the prisoner's brother, if he was in the courtroom, left without attracting attention. Prendergast was led away to his cell in the jail and Bailiff Becker was detailed to stay with him.

In speaking of the jury after the verdict had been found, Judge Brentano said: "It was the most intelligent jury I ever saw. There was not what you might term a cheap man in the lot. Every one of them was a good representative citizen and much higher in the positions that they held in the business and social worlds than the average who can be secured for jury duty."

From a court official it was learned that the jury was unanimously in favor of a death sentence.

Two ballots were taken. The first, to determine the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, resulted in a unanimous verdict of guilty. The second ballot, to determine upon the penalty, and the 12 men all said, "Hanging." The foreman then wrote out the verdict.

The fire occurred in a dilapidated brick building occupied by a saloon, restaurant and lodging house.

The flames, it is thought, originated in the kitchen and the fire was confined mostly to the interior of the building.

At the time of the fire there were nearly a score of lodgers in the upper rooms and although the fire was quickly gotten under control the work of rescuing the inmates was a difficult one on account of the smoke.
