There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable.

For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable.

This brought out the story of an exile from Guatemala whom the narrator met in Guatemala. Having got into trouble with the authorities, Señor Don Sebastian Mojarieta saved his life by fleeing to Amapala, Honduras, as many another exile has done, and there taking a steamer north to San Jose, Guatemala.

"At that Mojarieta fainted and was found on the deck by the steward and put to bed. Thereafter, it was a most miserable passage for the vessel touched at both of the Salvador ports and was about a week reaching San Jose. Mojarieta was sure his friend had been shot and expected a force to come off from each of the Salvador ports to demand him. Moreover, he was haunted continually by that picture of his dead friend.

"Once in Guatemala he obtained employment quickly and then began to recover something of his former spirits. He scribbled his vision to his overwrought imagination and was beginning to hope that his friend would yet appear when a letter was received from a relative in Salvador. It not only told that the friend had been shot by the government soldiers, but described the wounds of the body after it was dead. Mojarieta declares that the description accurately portrayed the vision he had of his friend, and he believes that his friend's spirit, being unable to rest or wholly throw off its desire to take passage on the steamer, had come on board and was occupying that berth."—New York Sun.

TALES OF THE SEA.

WEIRD YARNS OF THE SUPERNATURAL SPUN BY THE CAPTAIN.

The Skull in the Chain Locker—The Unlucky Bark in the Demerara Trade That Was Said to Be Haunted—The Story of a Kalle From Salvador.

We were eating dinner one night on the old cargo ship and talking of the happenings at sea and on shore that are called supernatural when the captain said:

"One sees some things at sea not so peculiar which are fit to make a nervous man see ghosts. There was that once in one of our green liners to the colonies, where a man was sent down to clean out the chain locker. The locker had seemed foul all the passage home, and so they hoisted out the chain and sent this fellow down with his brush and soap and bucket, with a lamp, to clean it out. In his wander he saw ghosts for a year after that, for when he'd got down on his knees to begin scrubbing he found himself bending over the skull of a dead man.

"It was most likely a man that had stowed away out in the colony and had been caught under the cable when they were running it down quickly, and so had the life crushed out of him.

"However, I did know of a case that seemed supernatural right enough. It was in the Demerara trade, and I was acquainted with the first officer of the bark where it all happened.

"In the first place, while she was out there loaded and ready to sail, the captain had trouble with one of the seamen, who drew out his knife and stabbed him to death then and there. The mate afterward took her home, but on the way a passenger took to ailing in some mysterious fashion and up and died very suddenly.

"Of course she was a haunted ship when she arrived home, and so the owners had her name changed, and she was refitted and painted up entirely different from what she had been. Then she sailed away with a new captain, but on the way out he took to drink, and by the time she reached Demerara he was off his head and killed himself with a revolver.

"Now she was haunted, sure enough, if you could believe the mate. Mind you, after she was refitted the mate said never a word to the new captain about what had happened in her before, and even when a new captain came out from home to take charge of her, believing that the last captain was naturally a drunkard, instead of one who had taken to it after coming on this ship, this first officer never said a word, because he did not believe in ghosts or even in a future state.

"However, the first night the new captain was on board the trouble began. The captain at about 9 o'clock went to his room and retired. An hour later he was calling the mate and telling that he had gone to sleep and then had been awakened by a light in the room. On opening his eyes he saw a short, thick-set man, with side whiskers, in the armchair at the desk, leaning over, with his elbows on the desk, holding his head between his hands and saying, 'Oh, my poor head! Oh, my poor head!'

"That was enough for the mate. He left the vessel that night with all hands. This new captain knew nothing of the style or manner of the one who had killed himself, and yet the picture—ghost or what you may call it—in the chair was the image in appearance and dress of the suicide and had complained in precisely the words and voice of the dead man.

"The interior of Rochester's new sanitarium calls for special notice, here the architect's invention and the decorator's art are seen to advantage. A few steps lead to the doorway on which appears the words 'Magnetic and Surgical Institute.' The door opens on a spacious hallway from which one turns on the right to the reception room, which is of imposing dimensions and richly furnished. In the rear of the reception room are three large consulting rooms, laboratory and bathroom, the whole comprising a suite of rooms that commands the spectator's admiration as he trends on Brussels and Mougrette carpets and feasts his aesthetic taste on the furniture of antique oak and gilded and corniced walls. The effect, especially under the elaborate electric lighting which has been introduced, is charming in the extreme. The remainder of the building is devoted to rooms for the reception of patients residing at the institute and undergoing medical and surgical treatment. Such is a mere outline of the prominent features of the sanitarium for the practice of the new therapeutics, having its headquarters in Rochester.

What exactly is meant by the new therapeutics may be briefly explained by a remark of the octogenarian who celebrated his 85th birthday last week; we refer to the distinguished physician and shining light in the literary world—Oliver Wendell Holmes. Speaking of drugs this veteran physician said, 'If medicine were thrown holtus into the sea it would undoubtedly be bad for the fish, but the act would confer a boon upon the human race.' In the new therapeutics the physician, who is pre-eminently a student of nature's methods of cure, trusts not to drugs, but to magnetic healing, massage treatment, electricity in all its forms, and baths of all kinds. Such treatment in the hands of Drs. Meagher & Wadsworth has been abundantly proved to be marvellous, not to say miraculous in its effects, especially in cases of nervous and chaotic diseases. Rochester may congratulate herself on the establishment of such an institution in her midst. No man can fall off finding the new sanitarium, which is now open for the treatment of patients, one door from the Wonderland theatre, no 20 North Clinton street, Drs. Meagher & Wadsworth can be consulted free of charge. Hours 9 to 9.
