About 16 mile gion I gott l'Action island, out to exch took a short a t line of sand in the vaves of the Atian sleigh ride to Mt. Marris Monday and the island of Postebleca. One the spent the evening with their former pastor, morning our party st. ed to visit it is Father Day. Of course every one had a trusty hooker. A traduocker came in sight of the shore great a diement was visible among the island re, and it was very hard to realize that we were still but 36 hours' journey from Landon

The inhabitants turned out en masse. The women and children in their scarts garments of red flanuel cronched outside their cabins, while numbers of the men tan down to the beach and put out in their corneles ou chance of rowing as to land. It was a strange scene and curionsly like a picture plate in a boy's book of adventures. We knew there was king of Innishkes, and soon a tall. brouze faced man was pointed out to us as his majesty. Ou landing all the party were introduced and conducted by him to the palace, where the queen downger. with her daughter, bade us welcome in true Irish fashion. The old lady was in her picturesque native costume-red dress and plaid shawlover herbead. Thorriness, however, had evidently on first sight of the hooker arrayed herself in modern fashlon to do us honor, and we were anused on penetrating into the reception found to flud advertisoments from shops in Buckingham Palace roa bard St. P. al's churchyard hung up to embellish the wall, though only by a favored few could they by read. The island was destricted of any school or means of matraction for the chaine of a very small proportion cither un. : gtood or apoke English, and there was neither watch nor clock among the people, who had a happy go lucky idea of time and troubled themselves little as to Greenwich regulations.

There were no church bells to ring, no trains to catch, no office hours requiring panethality, so when the sam was high in the heavens they would get through their not ordinous farming duties, and when he sauk in the great waste of waters they could sleep. The king's word settled all disputes. It was a hereditary monar by, and his people, so far as he was concerned, we re nutaxed. Happy those states, thought some of the visitors, where rotalty could be maintained with so little grandeur! However, I am in bonesty bound to add we found King Philip had other means of filling his coffers besides levying taxes on his faithful subjects and learned the art of making good his opportunity whenever the Saxon stranger ventured to land on his shore. But Innishken has an interest altogether apart from its aituation, surrounded as it is by lovely views of mountain cliff and rocky head land. On this spot, bundreds of years ago, early Christian missionaries landed, and on top of a shelly mount, half a mule from the beach are Christian remains of great milliguity. West of the island there stand also the ruins of a church said to have been built by the successors of St. Columba. - Leisure Hours

Jenny Lind.

Jenny Lind must have been the most simple, unpretending prima donna that over lived. When she first carne to England she was bound to sing only at the Royal Italian Opera House, and when commanded to sing at the queen's concert she was obliged to refuse. Very sorry to be compelled to notify this, she ordered her carriage and drove straight to Buckingham palace. She handed her card to an official, who, not nanaturally, declined to take it in. A higher authority happened to pass and took it upon himself to present it. As soon as her maiesty saw it sho said, "Admit her, by all means." Jenny Lind appeared and said simply that she was so very sorry to be unable to sing at her majesty's concert that she thought it better to call herself and explain. The queen was charmed with her natural manner, gave her a cerdial reception and promised to be her triend. —Today.

A Pine Pellah For Tinware. When the kitchen range is cleaned out, there will be found in the fine under the oven a considerable quantity of gray dust. It is not ashes exactly, not yet soot, but a smoke deposit as near akin to lampblack as a coal fire is able to produce—soft, light, impalpable, finer than the finest flour. Not many among those who throw this into the ash bin are probably aware, that this is the best thing in the world for polishing tinware, far surpassing all the prepared powders and pastes sold for that purpose. Apply it to the tin with a damp oloth, and a few strokes will produce such a luster as is on new ware or as the engraver puts upon his sing plates by the use of charcoal.—Exchange

AS WE SEE THINGS.

INFLUENCE OF THE INNER LIFE ON THE EXTERNAL WORLD.

How an Individual as a Scene May Have an Entirely Different Appearance to Two Persons Happiness and Sorrow Made by

There have been philosophers who declared that the earth on which we stand and the stars on which we gaze have no real existence, but are merely the outcomes of our inner selves. Perhaps the best answer to this is that the mind itself, at least that of most people, refuses to receive the idea. The difference between the me and the not me is too sharply defined in the inner consciousness to permit Bishop Berkeley's notion from taking root within us. Yet we cannot afford to overlook the germ of truth which this idea contains. Though not literally the creation of our thought, the outer world is to each one of us largely that which we make it Nature herself, in all her varied scenes, whatever she may be in reality, shows herself to us in the light which we throw upon her. One man looks at a landscape and sees land and water, grass and trees, hills and plains, and nothing more. Another, a farmer, sees the growng crops, the fallow land, the noxious weeds, the prospect for future tillage: and the obstacles to be overcome. Another, with a painter's eye, sees every variety of form and color, proportion and perspective, harmony and contrast, beauty and sublimity. To the melancholy manuall is tinctured with gloem -a leader pall covers even the gavest scenes—while to the joyous everything seems bright and glad, and even the dreamest of November days only suggests the radiant sunlight that is sure later on to struggle through the clouds.

So with the eights of a city. For each of us as they take on the aspect of our own mental condition. How differently they impress the citizen who has spent his life among them from the foreigner who views them for the first time! What a different message the stately and magaificent buildings bear to the absorbed man of business and to the architect who appreciates every detail of their construction!

If there is so wide a divergence in the spect which inanimate things have for us, the difference is still greater in the way we regard the men and women by whom we are surrounded. Character is a complex thing, difficult to detect, impossible to fathom, yet we presumptuously venture to gauge and pronounce upon it with the smallest modicum of knowledge. It is curious to notice how differently the same person will impress various individuals. His friend will perhaps see no fault in him, his enemy no virtue One will put faith in him; another will suspect his every action. One will deem him cold hearted another will think him affectionate and kind It must be that their own personalities are reflected in him, and that to a certain extent he does thus become for a time, while under their influence, what they suppose him to be always. It is certainly true that the good and gentle find far more goodness and gentleness in the world than those who are deficient in such qualities. It is the selfish man who is the keenest to detect selfishness in others; it is the overbearing who complain most of the arrogance and pride with which they are met, and the unjust who murmur at the injustice they receive On the other hand, the loving and sympathetic discover love and sympathy everywhere; the noble and true bring to light nobility and truth which might otherwise be hidden. Thus to a large extent we develop the character of those we meet. By a subtle magnetism we draw like to like and evolve out of other personalities the characteristics of our own. Even the outward circumstances of ife are largely what we ourselves make them. We are accustomed to consider prosperity a blessing and adversity ourse, but quite frequently they change places. It is the spirit in which they are received that determines their result. The rich and self indulgent man, sur rounded by luxury and opportunity, may be far less happy than his poorer neighbor who brings industry, fidelity and generosity into constant exercise. The same privileges that raise one young man to honor and usefulness are a snare and temptation to another. The same recreation that invigorates one enfeebles another. The same sorrow that softens one and leads him out of self to works of kindness and helpfulness prostrates another and renders him valueless. It is that which is within a man that so acis upon the externals of life as to decide their results to him, and through him to others.

If this beso, then happiness or wretch edness is largely in our power, and most of our complaints only bear witness to our own remissness. We may rightly recognize the futility of struggling against outward events which we cannot control, but we can always bring to bear upon them such a spirit and infuerice as shall turn evil into good and bitter into eweet - Philadelphia Ledger.

able Land With Pines. The French thoroughly appreciate the advantages to be derived from systematic tree planting. Tracts of sand have been covered with pine forests, and the word lande, borrowed, as it is thought, from the German is losing its meaning of "waste." Till a century ago a large portion of the forest of Fentainebleau consisted of bare sand hills, but the planting of pines was begun. A variety capable of standing the severest winters was evidently found, and millions of trees now diffuse healthy and agreeable odors, besides furnishing timber for fuel.

The decomposed fir needles, moreover, gradually form a crust of vegetable mold, permitting the growth of trees and shrubs less able than the pine to live on air. The department of the Landes, once a barren region, with sand so loose that people had to walk on stilts, is covered with pines, and the problem of draining the subsoil has been solved, as described in Edmond About's story of "Maitre Pierre." The losses by fire and anxiety to produce comething more remunerative than pine are now, bowever, inducing schemes of artificial fertilisation, In many French watering places dunes have been transformed into woods, thus holding out to seaside visitors the attraction of agreeable shade and a change from monotonous beach. Shifting sands have been prevented from extending inland. In some cases dunes have been acquired by companies, which, after planting them, have out them up into building lots and have seen them dotted with villag. Elsewhere municipalities have taken up the matter, and in large operations the district or the department has provided the funda. -London Times.
