THE POPE AND THE JEWS.

A despatch from Rome says:

"It is reported that the Pope is preparing an encyclical letter denouncing the anti-Semitic agitation in Europe."

Prejudice against the Jews has been strong throughout Europe from the dawn of its civilization, and irrespective of subsequent religious divisions among Christians.

Whether jealous of the substantial results of the proverbial Jewish financial ability intensified religious prejudice, or whether any among the Jews were themselves in some sort blamable for the widespread popular aversion to their race, are questions not to be considered here.

Enough to say that the Jews found protection for their persons, their property and the practice of the religion in Rome wherever else it might be denied them.

It is true that, from time to time, certain restrictions were imposed upon them; as, for example, they were forbidden the public exercise of their avocations on Church holidays, as they are still forbidden them here in America on Sundays; they were obliged to live together in a certain quarter of the city; and to make some distinction in their dress sufficient to show that they were not Christians.

But as no man had they to suffer in their worldly possessions—to speak of nothing higher—as Irish Catholics, for instance, had to suffer under the rule of Protestant England. By a constitution of Pope Clement XI, it was provided that if a Jew became a Christian, he should not be deprived, therefore, of his share of his father's goods. But he might not disinherit his other brothers, as in the case of that infamous penal law, whereby the younger son of a Catholic landowner, becoming a Protestant, could take the whole estate and impoverish the rest of his family.

Moreover, Rome decided that it was lawful for Christian princes to protect the Jews and tolerate their religion.

In the reign of Pope Martin V., 1417-31, the physician of the Vatican was a Jew.

Pope Sixtus V. treated the Jews with great kindness on the plea that "they were the family from whom Christ came."

The last remnants of discrimination against the Jews were abolished by Pope Pius IX. It is told of him that on one occasion having placed a liberal alms in the hands of a poor old man, one of his attendants interpreted, saying, "Your Holiness, he is a Jew."

Whereupon, Pope Pius IX: "My son, what does that matter? He is a man."

Recently, in the Lower Austrian Diet, a priest, Prof. Mullner, rector of the University of Vienna, took up the defense of the Jews against the attack by an anti-Semitic deputy on the appointment of a Jew, Dr. Gustav Kohn, to a professorship of mathematics in the University.

Though a loyal son of the Church and for twenty years a priest, said Professor Mullner, he could still acknowledge the great debt-salvageous to the Jews. He contrasted what Dante and St. Thomas Aquinas wrote about Jewish scholars with the tone adopted by members of the Austrian Diet. As to the standing of the University of Vienna, a reference to its scientific publications would show the important work done by Jewish professors. It had been found necessary to issue a new edition of a book from the pen of a Jewish professor, because it was the only one that had discussed a special subject.

After praising Professor Nothnagel and Jacob, and denouncing the tactics of the anti-Semites, he concluded:

"I am a Christian and a man. As a man I always stand at bay when my feelings are outraged. I care not for the applause of the multitude. But I have had my eyes opened to what goes on here. This will, however, not deter me from raising my voice in defense of any one who is unjustly attacked. You cannot expect that a Catholic priest can in everything take his cue from anti-Semitism."

Cardinal Sehonborn has laid before the just and generous-hearted Leo XIII, the evils of the anti-Semitic agitation in Austria; and there is no doubt that the powerful influence of the Father of the Faithful will be exerted to abate it.

OUR ROMAN LETTER.

His Eminence Cardinal Vaughan, Now

In Rome, Writes About the Primrose League.

Denies the Rumor of its Condemnation.

ROME, ITALY.

His Eminence Cardinal Rampolla del Tindaro, Cardinal Secretary of State, had, it is said, been suffering from indigestion.

The corpse of the Roman officer, Arnaldo Castellani, killed at Ostia by the troops of King Umberto, is to be brought to Rome.

Il Quotidiano, The Roman, a new periodical, contains an article on the Irish Letter in its edited number.

Cardinal Rampolla suggested his conference in defense of Catholic Doctrine which was to have taken place in the Church of St. Stefano, Roma.

Romanelli, the accounts of Sister Agostina, is still alive and unchanged in the Ecclesiastical of Rome.

Senator Clementi, Certe, who has just died at Vigevano, took part in all Garibaldi's Italian wars. He had married an Englishwoman.

Most probably the Duke d'Aosta will be married in Turin and not in London. Mado male, it is not in fact.

The Palermo press of sympathy into the murder of Cuneo. Romanelli, on Sunday of this city and Director General of the Bank of Sicily, seems likely to actively sympathize people holding eminent local positions.

Some time ago the Vatican political world was surprised by the sudden disappearance of Luigi Clementi.

Many names were suggested, and such perplexity felt. This is not to great now that the Letter of Rome, writes—"In Ministerial circles announcement has been made, saying that he was not a secret agent."

Major attributing a complete account history as to the cause of Clementi's disappearance. The truth, if you wish it, is this: Clementi had gone off with all the private funds of his newspaper for a year. Clementi had paid him the sum as a representative of his famous Roman political group, in the days immediately preceding his disappearance. It is a case of a hundred thousand francs.

The Most Honorable Clementi simply made another application for public money destined by the Minister for a given purpose. "That is the crude truth of the case," and it was gone to condemn while Clementi and Clementi as well as one of the most famous of the Italian press.

Anyhow, after such a disclosure, the public cannot complain that they are cruelly deceived by the liberal press. It is, at best, a case of vulgar fraud.

Monumentomani, perhaps, is the order of the day. It has the diagnosis of a fever, and every new development is a necessary result.

20th of September is to see a group of monument uncovered, and displayed in their native land, for what it made visible in Rome is manifested in the world.

But the fever is confined to a few victims as the demagogue of the public always shows when particular monumental disfigurement is made personally observable. No apology, therefore, is needed for the Garibaldi Monument, which has just been erected on the Via Nazionale.

It matters not that the good sense of the civilized world would prefer that the memories of the classic fall should not be interred upon that to millions and millions of those more deeply interested in the memory of Garibaldi is an offense. No, the Revolution must needs leave its mark on every part of the venerable Papal City; therefore officialdom was present at the laying of the first stone the other day.

Various Italian authors have issued publications in connection with the history of Torquato Tasso, the tercentenary of whose death occurs this month, and will be celebrated with feasts throughout the Kingdom. But perhaps no one has been upon a more interesting subject than the Catholic Roman, Virginia Priestess, as he has certainly brought more exhaustive research to bear upon his particular subject. He has only gone into print after long and exhaustive study. The second of his works he estimates that Tasso visited Rome not less than nine times, and never even once.

The following letter has been addressed to His Eminence Cardinal Vaughan on the death of Clementi, who is at present at Arona, Italy.

"Rightful College, Rome."

March 15, 1895.

"MY DEAR DEUTER—The card which I have just received from the English Legation, that the Primrose League is to be condemned by the Holy See, so far, at least, as I am concerned, is a complete surprise. I have never heard of any such thing, and I am sure that you, who appear, however, to be a member of the organization, have not been of a kind to address me, and to suggest the condemnation of the Primrose League, which is a purely English organization, and has nothing to do with the Roman Church."

"I am sure that you, who appear, however, to be a member of the organization, have not been of a kind to address me, and to suggest the condemnation of the Primrose League, which is a purely English organization, and has nothing to do with the Roman Church."
