The Sunday Closing Bill for Ireland has passed its second reading by a large majority in the House of Commons. Ireland has had Sunday closing since 1878, and it has worked well. All that Mr. T. W. Russell's Bill does is to include the large cities that had been previously exempt, Dublin, Cork, Belfast, and Limerick, under the Act. These at the passing of the Sunday Closing Bill in 1878, were left out, owing to the strong measures taken by the brewers and those interested in the trade Aoother of the provisions of the Bill is to increase the limit for the bona fide 'The presents were numerous and traveler from three miles to six

Information reached Caradonagh recently, that a farmer named Bernard Lafferty, of the Clogban, had, in the course of a family brawl about the division of a farm, fired at his brother with a fowling piece and wounded him dangerously. It is alleged that Bernard solved a gun and fired a charge of sparrow-shot, which entered Patrick's left leg above the knee. Dr. Callaghan pro ceeded to the place speedly and had the sufferer removed to the Union Hospital, Sergeant McCambridge depth; and the sufferer would not consent to amputation. A man named McNally, who had charge of a horse and car, and who, it is alleged, had also some drink. was proceeding in the same direction as Hughes. The two, it would seem, began "jockeying," or racing along the road, with the result that the vehicle in which Hughes was seated was overturned. Hughes succumbed to the injuries he then sustained. The jury returned a verdict in accordance with the facts.

TYRONE. The Stewartstown Orange Auteand turned out about twelve o'clock and proceeded to Cookstown, playing party tunes through a Catholic quarter of the town. Some fifteen police, under the command of Head-Constable O'Neill, of Newtownstewarts. in addition to the local police, were on duty. On the return journey from the laying of the foundationstone of the Orange hall of Cooks town, the same tactics were resorted to. As the special train passed through the railway station, cursing of Moriey, O'Brien, Gladstone, and the Pope was freely indulged in by a number of the excursionists; but no one took any notice of them.
