St. Read.
Christmas morning was observed here most joyfully with many Christmas greetings, as old Santa Claus showed much of his good will amongst very many of the good children.

Rev. Dr. Meenan, of St. Bernard's Seminary, officiated at early and late mass. During the early mass a very large number received communion.

Towards evening of Christmas the sad announcement of the death of our old Rev. pastor was made known, and it brought grief to the hearts of his beloved parishioners. His funeral took place last Friday morning. The church was full to its utmost capacity, with all the parishioners including a large number from St. John's parish and Holy Cross, Charlotte.

Rev. Bishop McQuaid preached the funeral sermon.

In the course of his remarks he said that this venerable priest had endeared himself to his faithful flock, having been for so many years amongst them in charge of their spiritual guidance. "Nearly all these parishioners here to-day," he said, "have been instructed by him from childhood, and even their own children have been taught by him who now has gone to rest."

The Bishop in all of his eloquent words of graceful feeling and consolation, had indeed touched a tender chord in the hearts of his listeners.

The remains were interred beside the monument which was erected some time ago, and was blessed with appropriate ceremony. It was the spot where the old church of St. Ambrose stood, being erected in the year 1849. It was the wish of Father Marjot to be buried in this little old cemetery amongst his old parishioners.

The following were the officers of the Mass: Rev. Mr. H. DeLagge celebrant; J. O'Connor, Geneva Falls, Securo; Thomas Hendrich, St. Bridget's, Rochester, sub-deacon; Dr. Moran, master of ceremonies.

FATHER BEGLEY'S RIDE.
The details of Father Begley's wonderful ride of 170 miles through the wilds of the Cherokee strip make an interesting and thrilling narrative. The subject has been widely noticed by the secular press of the country. The hero of the story is Rev. J. Begley, who is stationed at Kingman, in the diocese of Wichita, Kansas. He was born in Kansas in the territorial days and for twenty years has been a pioneer missionary priest in the West. He now has charge of the frontier of three dioceses, those of Wichita, Oklahoma and part of Texas. About six years ago a stage coach in which the priest was riding was upset, and both of his legs were broken, leaving them permanently deformed. Notwithstanding the physical defect he attends to the spiritual welfare of a scope of country that is 420 miles from one end of it to another.

The Paladaro Ranch, in Ransford county, in the pan-handle of Texas, is owned by a young man named Quinlan, whose mother went recently from New York to see him. While visiting the ranch she was taken suddenly ill, and, feeling that she had but a few hours to live, desired a priest. Her son sent his foreman to the swiftest steed in the ranch to Englewood, Kansas, the nearest telegraph station where he wired for Father Begley. The priest immediately took the train and arrived at four o'clock in the afternoon. There he was informed that arrangements had been made at the ranches enroute to furnish him relays of horses for every thirty miles. With 170 miles of desert country before him and an intricate trail to follow he mounted an Indian pony one hour before darkness and bravely headed for the far-off Paladaro ranch.

In ten minutes he was in the wilds of the Cherokee Strip. At dusk he entered the Salt Plains, where for ten miles there was neither a blade of grass nor a drop of anything to drink but saline water. At 7:30 that night he arrived at the Stirrup ranch, having made twenty-nine miles in two hours and five minutes. After taking a drink of milk he set himself squarely on the trail and put the spurs to a splendid cow pony. A darkness prevailed so intense that he could not see the trail, but the sound of the horse's hoofs on the beaten earth satisfied him that he was all right.

After traveling some ten miles he came to one of the forks of the Chermagne river and found it very dry, but the cattlemen were very brave, and he had great difficulty in crossing it. He saw a bunch of prairie grass on fire, so that he could find the trail on the other side of the river, which he did successfully, but the fire which he kindled spread more rapidly than he had expected, and he was nearly twenty minutes crossing it.

It would have done had it not been for the quicksand. This was the only time the priest lost his nerve, and when he regained his horse he never let go of the reins again.

After crossing the brow of a hill he saw a fire in the distance, and at eleven o'clock at night he arrived at Fox Ranch, whose proprietor had thoughtfully set fire to a haystack as a beacon light for the priest, whom he expected about that time. Father Begley did not wait for refreshments, but took the trail with a fresh horse, and at midnight crossed the line into No. Man's Land, where he passed a few settlements and found a more distinct trail. At 2:10 in the morning he arrived at McKinley Bros. ranch, where he got a fresh mount, and at once headed for the northern line of Texas.

He crossed the Adobe Walls trail on the Canadian river at five o'clock in the morning, and ten minutes thereafter secured a fresh horse, being guided during the last hour by the light of a quarter moon that had just risen. At seven o'clock in the morning he crossed from No. Man's Land into Northern Texas and arrived at Paladaro Ranch at 10:36 a. m., after completing nearly 170 miles in seventeen hours and thirty minutes, a feat which, considering the nature of the country, the darkness of the night and the physical condition of the man is acknowledged by all frontiersmen to constitute the greatest ride on record.

Only one horse gave out under him during the whole trip, and that was what is called an American horse in contradistinction to an Indian pony. This horse sprained his leg in a prairie-dog hole and walked lame for nearly five miles. This happened about three o'clock in the morning, and lacking the excitement of rapid riding, the priest almost went to sleep in his saddle. In Hansford county, Texas, he was met in the morning by two farmers, who upon seeing him riding so fast, thought he was a horse-thief and stopped him but his priestly dress soon satisfied them of their mistake, and they not only let him pass, but offered him a fresh horse and any other assistance he might need. As has been already stated, he ate nothing during the trip and drank but once. Father Begley arrived at the ranch just an hour before Mrs. Quinlan became unconscious and five hours before she died. He was very much fatigued by his ride, but did not notice it until after the woman's soul had departed from the body, for he stayed by her bed until death took her away.

Blaze for the Journey of Life.
Never ridicule sacred things, or what others esteem as such, no matter how absurd they may appear to you.

Never show levity in the house of God.

Never resent a supposed injury till you know the motive of the author of it.

Always take the part of the absent person who is insured in company, so far as the truth and propriety will allow.

Don't affect to be witty, or to jest so as to hurt the feelings of another.

Say as little as possible of yourself and of those who are near to you.

Aim at cheerfulness without levity.

Speak with calmness and deliberation on all occasions, especially of circumstances which lead to irritation.

Frequently review your conduct and note your failings.

The Arrow expresses sorrow that Bishop Whitehead says that persons leaving the Church of Rome to join the "Bitualists," must be reconfirmed. Vulgarly speaking, this is "fresh." But it is hardly necessary for the Bishop and the Arrow people to fall out over the number which will join the "Bitualists" from the Church of Rome. The humblest and uneducated Catholic, by Divine grace confirmed in his or her faith, and while they observe the laws of God, and His Church, they cannot lose that grace, and hence cannot fall away from their faith, their Church or their God.

The Roman Catholic belongs to his faith even when dormant in his duty to God, and his adherence to his faith is an evidence that his soul is not entirely deprived of the Grace received through the sacraments of Baptism and Confirmation, so that when the "Bitualists," or any other sect is approached for admission by unconfirming himself a Roman Catholic, they may be confident that they are in the right way, and need not be troubled by the "Bitualists."
