

FATHER KOENIG'S NERVE TONIC

Hundreds Can Testify.

Wilmington, N. C. Feb. 1904.
I was stricken with paralysis about two years ago, so that I could not use my right side. Three months later I was cured by the use of Father Koening's Nerve Tonic. It worked miracles on me. I would have never believed that such a cure was possible, but hundreds of my acquaintances can testify to it. Now my mind is perfectly clear again. I am transacting my own business affairs, thank God for it.

ACADEMY

Manager Cook announces a re-engagement of "The Midnight Special." The production of this really excellent melodrama pleased the public so well and drew such good houses that the management have arranged a return date and will again present "The Midnight Special" next week. Since playing here the piece has been materially improved and the cast changed and strengthened by having a number of new people, better fitting several of the parts.

The plot of course is the same, and will be remembered as an interesting one, admitting of some good character acting and a fine display of special scenery.

Among the many interesting scenes is one representing the Grand Union Depot, and the interior of the Woodland Vine Distillery, showing the presses at work. The story, though not entirely new, is one of pathos and power, and at times ingeniously conceived, and the fun legitimately humorous and delightfully droll.

WONDERLAND THEATRE

The show booked at this house for the coming week is a good one, headed by Will H. Fox, the great comedian pianist who travels under the title of Paderewski giving a very ludicrous burlesque of the eminent pianist Paderewski in which he introduces some very good comedy work interspersed with good parts of solos, and very and very funny imitations.

Another act that will be welcomed back is that of the Acolian Trio composed of Alke May, contralto, Margaret Weble, soprano, and Hugh Curtis, Mezzo, soprano, undoubtedly one of the best vocal acts that ever appeared on the Wonderland stage. They made a big hit earlier in the season, and will no doubt repeat their former success. Another act that will be a pleasing feature of the programme is Moreland and Thompson, and Irvin T. Bush, in an act that is replete with comedy situations good singing and excellent dancing. Besides these three attractions there will be seen Eldora and Norine the acknowledged premier jugglers, and equilibrists of the world; Charley Case, America's greatest and most original Monologue artist, and another strong act not yet announced. With a bill like this, crowded houses should be the rule all the week.

Worth's gowns, and Esser's shoes are essential to make the evening a bit complete.
