COSTLY PRAYER BOOKS.

Dainty Easter Offerings Which Will B Seen In Fair Hands.

The daughter of a famous New York millionaire will walk up the church lele on Easter morning with a $500 prayer book and hymnal in her bands.

It is the Kaster gift of her flance, and it was ordered from a New York jeweler months ago. It is not studded with gems. That degree of display has not been reached in prayer books yet. It is bound in soft leather, trimined with heavy gold, over whose surface the Easter lily has been traced in enamel. The metal in the book's ornamentation may not be worth more than $40 or $50 The cost is in the artistic rendering of the special design. A mono gram, half concealed among the enamel filles, shows that the device was made to order, and possibly enhances the value of the gift in the eyes of the receiver. It is pleasant to know that you have something which is unique as well as beautiful. To some it is even pleasanter perhaps to know that their Easter gifts are costly, though I believe that many a prayer book mark, with its dangling silver ornaments, which cost the thousandth part of what was paid for this book of prayer, is valued quite as bighly and has created as much joy in the giving and receiving. It takes an arrist to make a $2 book sell for $500-an artist in salling as well as an artist in designing and in executing the design. The shopkeeper probably calculates that a man who can pay $200 or $300 for an Easter gift can pay $500 as readily. But for the man who had not bundreds to spend the Easter shopping this year has had its attractions. In fact, the popular taste at this season runs t what is comparatively inexpensive. The favorite form of Easter gift this year is a combination of prayer book and hymnal. It has come in styles both costly and inexpensive. In the tashionable shops the least expensive has cost $11. Both books are bound in flexible morocco or russia leather. In the flap of one Sinding the agire the following rule: the allit, into which the cover of the other book slides. Thus they become one when they are carried to church and two again at a moment's notice. In the simpler forms these books are decorated, each or one cover, with a plain corner of silver.

The following rule: Company, florints, Sullivan was in town on the matter of the same of the first Sunday of the Vick & Hill Company, florints, Sullivan was in town on the matter of the song and responded to an ensure the steer day is always the first Sunday of the vick & Hill Company, florints, Sullivan was in town on the matter of the song and responded to an ensure of the matter the first Sunday of the Vick & Hill Company, florints, Sullivan was in town on the matter of the song and responded to an ensure of the song and responded to an ensure of the was also appreciated. In the flap of one Sinding one cover, with a plain corner of silver of ladies which Easter can fall and April 25 the lat- posed of Mesers, Edward H. Vick, of Mr. Perhanus Lawis was found to be no

There are books a little larger, with a perforated design in silver bordering the binding. At each corner is a cross. These are valued at $40. They cost more than the bladings of solid silver for there are a few people who want their prayer books cased in solid metal. One which I saw this year has a design in heavy relief on both sides, and on each are stamped the title, "Common Prayer",—common prayer from a very uncommon prayer book, it will be. The value of this was $80.

The most costly prayer books which will be carried on Easter Sunday will be those with perforated covers of gold or silver for the workmanship is valued for above the metal used. Books bound in substan tial padded leather, with but a thin veneer ing of silver, which will be seen in some of the fashionable churches, will repre sent an expenditure of not less than $40. Prayer books and hymnals adorned with $150, and those decorated in enamels will have cost $200 or $800 probably.

There is keen competition in New York to make things costly -just as there is an even keener competition in some quarters to make things cheap. In the first class are those who cater to the money princes. To many of these the money cost of an article represents its value. There is a limit to the amount of gold and sliver with which even a jeweler will incrust a hymnal. So the cost of these Easter gifts was increased this season in another direction. For the morocco and russia leather of common use was substituted elephant hide for those who wished to pay for itnot in its original thickness, but planed down after it was tanned. There was the hide of the cassowary, plainly perforated where the feathers had been. There was monkey hide, stiff and clumsy. There was a honeycomb binding which was the slippery tripe of traditional toughness, tanned and reduced to make it serviceable. And there were lizard skin and alligator skin and snakeskin, silver gray and black or dyed, any one of a dozen fashionable colors. All these were expensive, and tens of thousands of dollars will not cover the cost of those which will grace or decorate the Easter service in fashionable churches.

The taste of Easter givers has run to prayer books and hymnals and Bibles this year as in years before. But the souvenir spoon, with a cross stamped in its gilded bowl, will adorn many an Easter dinner table, and the simple book mark, too, which was made popular two seasons ago, has lost none of its attractiveness—possibly because the one can be purchased for a dollar or two and the other for as little FLORA KNEELAND.
