THE OLD SONGS.

No Such Popular Music as That Sang by Men.

Two old New Yorkers sat together in one of the uptown music halls the other night when an amiable woman, with an ample contralto voice, ambled on the stage and performed "Just a Song at Twilight." She kept it up for two verses, and it wasn't so very badly done, but at the end there was hardly a hand clap of applause.

"Frost," said one of the old New Yorkers, perhaps for want of anything better to say.

"Nevertheless," answered the other, "that woman has got the glimmering of an idea that might be made very profitable by some music hall manager in this town, for one season at least. The trouble with her song is that it was never a great favorite, and what popularity it did have was too recent. But let some manager get a good singer to do the real favorite among the old English ballads, and I'll bet he'd make a hit. It would be better if he had a quartet of men. There is no such popular music as the singing of men. Let such a quartet come here and do the old songs, and you'd give up your dollars to hear them, and I'd give up mine, and so would all the rest of the boys, and they'd keep it up long enough, too, to make it a good investment. But the singers must be good ones, with well trained voices. There's a lot of the old songs which are extremely popular, in spite of the fact that they're made of them. There's 'Annie Laurie,' for instance. Sung as a second base solo, with the rest of them, doing the accompaniment, it would go sure. And there's 'Sally in Our Alley.' Why, there's a man up at the club who makes a specialty of ballad singing, and he never gets away without doing that song. He has a high, sweet tenor voice, and there isn't a man who has ever heard him who wouldn't go miles in the rain to hear him repeat it. 'Marsa's in the Cold, Cold Ground' is another, and there are those old Irish ballads 'Kathleen Mavourneen' and 'Believe Me, If All These Endearing Young Charms.' There was a quartet in Boston several years ago that used to go around the country giving concerts. I've heard them several times, and the time they made the biggest hit was when a big part of their programme was made up of the old songs. It hasn't been done in a summer season in New York that I can remember, and I'd like to see it tried. It would get my money sure."—New York Sun.

Quar Pear Tree.

A freak of nature which is a source of much interest to horticulturists is displayed on a pear tree in Widow Alexander's yard on East Main street, Lehigh, Ind. Blooms entirely foreign to the nature of the tree appear from two different branches, while the branches in question are natural and as no pears are yet in sight speculation plays a decided part as to what the winsome widow will feed her palate on from this tree. Many make daily visits to see the blooms. A professor from Purdue university is to visit the find, and his views are eagerly awaited.

An Indian Prophecy.

A sensation has been caused in Mexico by the appearance of a young Indian prophetic who predicts a general conflagration, to be preceded by signs and wonders, among them, the falling of edifices and the premature speaking of infants. Several bridges have fallen, and the Indians, believing these incidents to be the fulfillment of the prophecy, are alarmed. The bishop of Tabasco has sent for the girl, who claims to have had celestial visitors during her recent sojourn in the forests along the Grijalva.
