The programme was here broken by the rendition of a pantomime. "Nearer My God to Thee," and "Lead, Kindly Light" and several hymns were anng by some of the scholars behind the curtain while the graduating class of fourteen young ladies, all handsomely dressed in Greek costumes, posed on the stage. The effect was beautiful and the large house was spell-bound with admiration.

"The Good Novel an Educator." by Josephine E. Travis, was rendered in a distinct voice and a manner that showed the young lady to be a perfect master of timidity on the stage. Her "novel" was interesting. Margaret D. Mayock was excused from appearing, and Rosa M. McArdle followed with a talk. "The Site of Rochester." Her essay treated of the old history of the city, of the Eastern League up to Thursday of the many interesting facts connected with it, and was in all one of the most interesting read, and was mearly as pleasing as the young lady herself.

Helen C. Driscoll in "A Plea for a National Flower," spoke at length on the desirability of a national flower, and she certainly convinced all her hearers that her views were barre, June 29, 30; Syracuse, July 3, 4.

The valedictory was read by both Marie F. Flynn and Elizabeth M. Le-Frois.

Miss Flynn came first and spoke OVID'S at length on education. In a charming manner she told of the many needs of higher education. We have not the space to describe this, nor the other essays as they should be, and can only say it was a good, solid on DESCRIPTION OF THE CHURCH say, well rendered.

The senior class then sang the class song.
