WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—The immigration bill now goes to the president, the last legislative step having been taken in the senate by an agreement to the conference report on the bill. Strong opposition was made to the report, but on the final vote the friends of the measure rallied to a small majority, the vote being: Yeas, 34; nays, 31.

The bill as passed extends the immigration restriction against "all persons physically capable and over 16 years old, who cannot read and write the English language or some other language; but a person not able to read and write, who is over 50 years of age, and who is the parent or grandparent of a qualified immigrant over 21 years old and capable of supporting such parent or grandparent, may be sent for and come to join the family of a child or grandchild over 21 years old, similarly qualified and capable, and a wife or minor child not able to read or write, may accompany or be sent for and come to join the husband or parent similarly qualified and capable.

SIX MEN CAUGHT IN THE RUINS.

Terrible Accident in the Freeman Mines at Talcottville—One Body Missing Legs Two Men Escaped Injury. Dawley's Spine Was Broken.

GOVERNOR, N. Y., Feb. 15.—One topic for miles around has been the terrible mine accident which occurred at Talcottville. The accident occurred in the Freeman mine, leased by the United States Talcott company. There were eight men in that section of the mine, which was a new one, 100 feet underground.

A blast had been fired and the men were engaged in scaling off the loose pieces. A pillar of tall, 30 feet square, had been left standing for a support to the roof of the shaft. Six of the men were working around this. Without a warning any of the huge masses, comprising about 200 tons of rock slipped from its position and collapsed, burying the men.

Five of the men were jammed up against the wall and terribly crushed. The sixth, William Dawley was thrown up in some manner and but three feet of the rock lay on him. Two other men, Adolf Trombley and William Horn, were in the mine. The former was beyond the pillar and was out of danger. Horn was working close to the pillar, but up near the roof.

When the crash came the rocks fell all around him, striking his drill, but he was not injured. He crawled up the track of the skip to the end of the ladder, and went to the surface to give the alarm. A searching party was at once organized and put to work.

The first body found was that of Fred McCoy. He was single. Next the mutilated remains of Mildred Lowman were found.

All this time groans were issuing from the heap of debris, and the workmen finally located William Dawley. After several hours' labor the man was uncovered. It was found that his spine was broken, one of his legs crushed, and there were other injuries of an internal nature. He retained consciousness to the time of his death.

Leuchman leaves a widow and three children. Dawley a widow and seven children. The body of Charles Laroek was found later. He leaves a widow and six children.

Then the body of Albertson was found. He leaves a widow and two children. A few minutes later the remains of John Matthews were brought to the surface. He was married and had eight children. The body was in a terrible condition. The body of Tetterton was minus the legs.

Why There Was No Salute.

Black Jack Percival, who was a naval captain before the war, once brought a cargo of Spanish jacks home in a man-of-war. He was in Spanish waters when the jacks were given to the United States by Spain, says the New York Sun, and was ordered to bring them out in his ship. It made him very angry, but he got the beasts aboard and sailed for New York. When he came through the Narrows, the guns had been rolled back, and out of every port there stuck a jack's head. Thus decked out and without a salute he came to his anchorage. The admiral commanding sent post-haste to demand why Captain Percival had not saluted. "I didn't salute," was the doctory captain's answer, "because I couldn't. I had two men twisting every jack's tail, but not a d—d one of them would bray."—Argonaut.

GENERAL

Death of a Noted Cavalry Leader—Served the Day at Gettysburg.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—General Alfred Pleasanton, one of the most distinguished cavalry commanders of the late war, died at his apartments in the Greason House in this city. In spite of the fact that General Pleasanton was one of the most eminent cavalry commanders of the war, he had for the past seven years lived an almost absolute hermit's life in Washington, denying himself to all persons save a few of his most intimate friends. He felt that he had not been well treated by the government after his distinguished services in the war, and this, together with ill health preyed upon his mind and man. His eccentric course of conduct was determined by the fact that his bill is to be brought before the house this week.

General Pleasanton was born in the District of Columbia. He served throughout the Mexican war and was brevetted for distinguished gallantry at Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma. In 1856 he was raised from the rank of captain and became a major in the regular army in 1863, a year later becoming a brigadier general in the volunteer service. As a cavalry commander he was eminently capable and brilliant. His rendered distinguished services at Antietam and against Price in the campaign in Missouri, but his most distinguished service, perhaps, was at Gettysburg, where he was the chief of Meade's cavalry forces.

It was claimed by many of General Pleasanton's old army friends that he really saved the battle of Gettysburg by bringing into play his light brigade batteries against Pickett's advance, in the famous charge across the wheat field, while many of the heavy Union batteries were inactive on Little Round Top.
