

Musicians at a Bargain.
 One of the large stores in London has lately exhibited a degree of enterprise which surpasses similar establishments here in New York. It seems easy enough now to buy everything in these places, but the London establishments have surpassed New York in one respect. In addition to supplying clothing of all kinds, cigars, edibles and almost every conceivable object, the most enterprising of these places offers musical artists, and their names are followed by the figures at which their services can be obtained just as the groceries and tobacco are followed by quotations of prices. In this list Ben Davies, the well known English tenor, is quoted at a price equal to about $260.50, and Johannes Wolf, the violinist, is to be had for about $78.75. There is a bargain on the list in the shape of some duetists who are marked down to $30.50, while the cheapest thing on the list is a trio at $31.50. It is said to be as easy to order a musicale at this establishment as it is to buy a barrel of flour or a bicycle.—New York Sun.

 A Cure in Mexico.
 San Pedro, Coahuila, Mex., Apr., 1903.
 It is about 8 years since one of my sons had the first attack of epileptic fits and since then I spent over $200 for medicines and consultation with the best physicians and travel in this country and Europe, but of no avail, because he took the first bottle of Father Koenig's Nerve Tonic he has not had a fit, he has taken only 24 bottles full and eats almost anything, without any bad effect. I am not to recommend the Tonic, as acquaintance of mine having for 23 years, from 8-10 attacks daily, had none since she took the tonic about 3 months ago.

SHORT NEWS STORIES.

An Old Incident In the House The Pickpocket's Stratagem His Bad Break—A Lucky Mania.
 Funny things are continually happening in the house when they are the least looked for. Mr. Payne of New York had just made a motion to adjourn when Mr. Sherman, his colleague, beseeching him to wait a moment, hurried toward the speaker's desk and said something to him that those in the galleries could not hear what it was about. The members were looking on in wonderment until Speaker Reed said:
 "The gentleman from New York informs me that the house has passed a senate bill which the senate has not itself passed."
 "Oh, in that case," said Mr. Payne, with a grin, "I withdraw the motion to adjourn."
 Then, while every one was wondering just what he proposed to do about it, half a dozen other members crowded around Mr. Sherman in the forum, the clerk hastily looked up the bill in question and some of those nearest the desk began to laugh. Mr. Sherman grew red in the face and held some more low toned conversation with the speaker.
 "The second information," began the speaker, in those nasal tones which those who know him accept as an indication of his keen appreciation of the ridiculous, "seems to be incorrect, and the house appears to have properly performed its duty."
 In the meantime Mr. Payne had forgotten about his desire to adjourn, and the house went on transacting business another full hour.—Washington Post.
A Pickpocket's Stratagem.
 There was a brief but embarrassing incident in a woman's life the other day, and she has not realized yet the full details of a situation which stunned her completely for the few minutes it lasted. She had gone into one of the big department stores up town and was standing at a counter waiting for the girl to attend to her. Then she felt a woman's hand in her pocket. Involuntarily she seized her skirt and was fortunate enough to catch the woman's hand. This happened in a second, and none of the women about her had noticed the incident. The pickpocket struggled to free her hand while the other woman clung to her wrist, not with any desire to arrest her or even to retain her, but merely with the feeling that she was doing something. Neither had spoken a word. The first act was the pickpocket. Her hand was still held, and, with a pretense of grasping the other woman's hand, she cried out:
 "This woman is trying to rob me."
 Everybody turned to look at the two, and in her astonishment the woman let go the thief's hand. The thief drew her hand suddenly out of the pocket and while the crowd about them was gaping at the innocent woman darted through it and escaped. The other woman's head swam, and there was a dark shadow in front of her eyes for a second. But the women about her realized the true situation in a moment, and their sympathy was all for her. They helped her to recover her composure and get into the open air as soon as possible.—New York Sun.
His Bad Break.
 A well known Chicago lawyer has a charming wife who is extremely jealous. A few days ago there was quite a psycho-technical display in that household, because the wife discovered what she considered documentary proof that her husband had been interesting himself too deeply in a young woman who formerly had been his schoolgirl friend and who lives in a suburban town.
 The husband protested and swore that his partner's suspicions were entirely unfounded, and a truce was patched up. The wife, as an additional peace offering, invested $5 in a valentine the other day—all covered with Cupids, lace, ribbons and poetry of the caloric sort—and sent it to him at his office. The recipient promptly gave it to the dainty janitor on condition that the latter should take it right home and keep quiet about it.
 A week passed, and there was another storm on the domestic horizon. "John," said the young wife, "did you receive a valentine a few days ago?" The husband hummed and hawed and "couldn't remember." Suddenly a great light came to him. "Great Scott, Lizzie," he said, "you didn't send it, did you?"
 "Who did you think sent it?" inquired his wife sweetly. And he has been busy ever since trying to answer.—Chicago Times-Herald.
A Lucky Mania.
 "There's a whole lot of truth in the old saying, 'A fool for luck,'" remarked an old Nevada sport, "and when luck does hit a fool it hits him hard." F. instance, there's the case of that Reno mania. Never heard of that? Well, it was this way: One evening just about look up time a crazy man climbed the fence at the insane asylum two miles out of Reno and made tracks as fast as he could for good, lucid town society. He had no money, of course, and so struck the first man he met for a loan. He got half a dollar and inside of two minutes he had it on a faro layout.
 "Jim Conroy was dealing in Al White's palace, and the Spider was the lookout. Of course the crazy fellow won his first bet and his second and his third, and before the deal was over he was betting red chips all over the table. Before the second deal was over Conroy had to send out for another bank roll, and in the middle of the third deal he closed down. When the attendants from the asylum caught the escaped, he had over $4,500 in his pockets and from a poor roustabout became a pay patient for life. And to this day the only man that ever made Jim Conroy close down didn't have sense enough to eat out of a rough."—San Francisco Post.

Champion Pie Eater of Congress.
 Representative Cooper of Wisconsin is known as the champion pie eater in congress. His friends say he can eat more pie at one time than any other man in congress. Whenever the congressman's digestive organs are in good working order he can usually be seen at the senate restaurant partaking of two or three pieces of Page's choice pie. Pumpkin pie, "the kind that mother used to make," appeals particularly to the palate of the Badger State congressman. Frequently he has been seen to eat two pieces of this special kind of pie and then glance about the counter to see if there is not another variety that he might select. Mr. Cooper never takes his pie "straight." It is always taken along with a piece of cheese and sometimes with a bottle of beer.—New York Sun.
Only Captains May "Chin" Empire.
 "The principal proposed change in the baseball rules," said a crank, "as affecting the spectators is the one whereby only the captains of the respective teams have the right to 'chin' the umpire, and then only on a question of the legal interpretation of the rules. The rowdism of the men upon the bleaching boards, it seems, should have some attention at the hands of the baseball managers, and even stopping the coarse cries from the grand stand could only cause a larger attendance."—Chicago Tribune.

 Benjamin Harrison has been very happy, and from all accounts he is to be still happier at about the time when William McKinley is raised into the highest honors.—Washington Times.
 This is what Olive Schreiner thinks of Cecil Rhodes: "He is Napoleon over again, but Napoleon in a financial, industrial and political world. He has all Napoleon's greatness, not a little of Napoleon's pettiness, and he will fall some day, overwhelmed, as was Napoleon, by the corruption of his own tools. What Napoleon did with steel Cecil does with gold. Around him there is a court of creatures who only live to minister to his will, but who would turn and rend him tomorrow if he were tripped up by fate. As Napoleon thought Providence was always on the safe side of the heavy battalions, so Cecil is convinced there is no God so omnipotent as that of the full purse."—
