

PERPETUAL ADORATION.

It seeks to bring the people to the practice of prayer. What is the aim of the perpetual adoration? Its aim is twofold. It seeks to provide a continual guard of reverential love before the tabernacle in our churches and to bring the masses of the people to the practice of prayer and interior perfection by teaching them to realize what the blessed sacrament really is in order to bring about practical results in their own souls and those who come within their influence.

Cromwell, earl of Essex, established parochial registers for births, deaths and marriages between 1580 and 1688, in the reign of Henry VIII.

Dust showers are frequently reported from ships in the center of the Mediterranean sea and from hundreds of miles off the west coast of Africa. The dance called hompedates as far back as 1890 and took its name from the instrument called the pibora, to the music of which it was danced.

St. Jerome states that he saw Scotchmen in the Roman armies in Gaul whose regular diet was human flesh and who had "double teeth all around." In Australia horses and cattle are now being branded by electricity from storage batteries. The temperature is uniform and the brand safe and artistic.

The first great fire in an American city occurred at Boston Aug. 8, 1897. By this conflagration 180 buildings were destroyed, the loss amounting to over $200,000. In France a man can put away his wife if she goes on the stage without his consent; in Portugal, if she publishes literary work without first asking his permission.

An English writer says that the Glasgow water from Loch Katrine is very soft, and on that account it is computed that the annual saving to the city in soap alone amounts to some $180,000. That the earth is solid right to the center, with the exception of lakes and reservoirs of molten matter below the crust, has been demonstrated by the recent researches of Lord Kelvin and other authorities.

Among the additions to the Zoological society's gardens, London, is a Mexican skunk, which was captured on an estate in Yorkshire, having escaped from captivity. Three young cheetahs from Somaliland have also been added to the collection. John Frederick Bottger, who invented hard porcelain, was originally an alchemist, who, while employed at the transmission of metals by the elector of Saxony, discovered red porcelain and later, by a strange accident, white or true porcelain.

In later times the abbesses of the great convents were sometimes summoned to councils, and in the reign of Edward III seven countesses and three baronesses were summoned to attend by proxy at a council at Westminster (1362), along with nobles, abbots, etc. The ages at which the greatest commanders made their reputations are those: Alexander the Great, between 21 and 31; Hannibal, between 26 and 45; Julius Caesar, between 42 and 55; Frederick the Great, between 29 and 51; Gustavus Adolphus, between 36 and 38; Napoleon, between 27 and 46.

The king of Benin, on the west coast of Africa, believes in the efficacy of human sacrifices. When times are good, he kills a large number of slaves, and in seasons of calamities he kills an equally large number of these unfortunates, and in both cases to appease the gods, who are supposed to be equally angry at the good and ill fortune of mortals. It is not generally known that the remains of all the czars of Russia since Peter the Great lie in an ancestral chapel built on one of the islands of the Neva. All the cenotaphs are exactly alike, being a block of white marble, without any decoration whatever. The only distinction by which each one is marked is the name of the deceased emperor.

There are instances of countesses, baronesses and abbesses being summoned to send proxies or to furnish their military service, but not to attend parliament as peeresses. The nearest approach to such a summons is that of four abbesses who, in 1306, were cited to the great council held to grant an aid on the knighting of the Prince of Wales. Of all the numerous instruments employed in our time, the oldest and most widely known are the drum, harp and bagpipe. The first of these, simple as its construction is, has literally played an important part in music. It originated in the north of Asia and was for more than 2,000 years the only instrument known to the rude and roving Tartars.

It is interesting to note that, had it not been for the act of settlement, the English crown, by hereditary descent, would have gone to the family of the daughter of Charles I and would now be vested in Mary Theresa of Modena. This lady can trace her descent in a direct line to Henrietta Maria, the young-est daughter of Charles I, who married Philip, duke of Orleans.

CURRENT MISCELLANY.

A taxidermist at Northwood, N. Y., has been making experiments as to the effect of light reflected in a bird's eyes. A glass 7 or 8 inches in diameter has been found most serviceable. The antics of blue jays are remarkable when the light strikes them as they sit in the shadow of an evergreen tree. They jump to another branch and try to look into the light, but they have to turn away, as the light dazzles them. After they fly around the reflection, but after practice one is able to keep the light at ways on them, and the birds do not infrequently come within the reach of a man's hand.

A ruffed grouse gives a startled look when the light strikes it. Then up it jumps, and away it goes. Hawks, too, are usually startled or annoyed so that they fly off. Woodpeckers don't seem to mind it at all. Rabbits blink and stare at a glass for awhile, then they go around a stump and sit up again, as if waiting for the light to play tag with them.—New York Sun.

Conrad Cooke, the electrician, has made a careful study of the jumping bean, and one of his discoveries is interesting. The beans—they grow on a species of euphorbia—seem able, when laid on a flat surface, to travel horizontally in a given direction, but when suspended in air they are absolutely devoid of lateral movement. A bean hung by a fiber will jump some times half an inch upward, but will never acquire a pendulous movement. Similarly a bean mounted at the end of a quill and fitted with a mirror, like a galvanometer needle, will cause a spot of light to move up and down a vertical scale, but never off it. The reason for this is doubtless that the movements are caused by the convulsive action of a grub, which chooses this seed for its habit.

As a means of progress are perfectly safe, it has been supposed that the eggs laid in the flower and become inclosed with the seed. After emergence and passing into the cocoon state, the grub develops into a moth similar to the clothing moth, whose grub is so destructive to apples.—New York Times.

Cheese and Cupid. Duobus litigantibus, tertius gaudet. A very pretty modern instance of Cupid's aid has occurred at Charkoff. Two members of the Charkoff Chess club fell in love with the same lady. They agreed to settle the dispute for her by a tournament upon the chessboard, the loser handing himself to the victor by the water. They fought for three long days, and the result was—a drawn game. So they fought again, and the fight lasted for three days, but it ended again in a decisive remiss. There was no chess left for it, after the lists a third time. But while they were in the heat of the fight they were arrested by the watchful laws that a "Tertius" had arrived, had proposed to the queen of the tournament and had been accepted by her.—Westminster Gazette.

A Perpendicular Farm. Julian Hawthorne writes of "A Tropical Climax," describing one of his experiences in Jamaica, for The Century. Mr. Hawthorne says: "The land up here is doubtless government land, which sells for about 50 cents an acre. If, however, it is measured on the horizontal, such an estate as this must come cheap indeed, for I don't believe to horizontal extent of this plantation, which might have had an area of a quarter of an acre, was more than 15 or 20 feet. It is a perpendicular region. The most convenient way to ascend such heights would be to take a derrick to the top and swing the man with the hoe by a rope in front of his field of labor. He would have to be careful in gathering his produce, lest it should escape his grasp and roll half a mile down into the depths of the valley.

A Scientific Vision. One of the popular attractions at the Munich congress of experimental psychology was a dark room in which remarkable experiments with X rays were performed. A chemically prepared screen was placed in front of the spectators, and the screen being rendered fluorescent by the rays, which proceeded from behind, a boy was caused to pass slowly between the screen and the source of the rays. As he passed, his bones, as well as his heart, lungs and other internal organs, were visible in shadowy outlines. Professor J. Mark Baldwin of Princeton, describing this experiment in The Popular Science Monthly, says that the movements, in regular rhythm, of the organs referred to were plainly seen.

Milton. Milton has the reputation of having been in his youth eminently beautiful, so as to have been called "the lady of his college." His hair, which was light brown, parted at the middle and hung down upon his shoulders according to the pictures he has given of Adam. As a young man he was vigorous and active, a dexterous fencer, and able to handle a sword with considerable skill. In his latter days he was a martyr to gout. Some of his works were performed under great difficulties and in blindness. At his death he left his wife and children £1,500. On the other hand, the will of his publisher was proved at £200,000 sterling.

An Old Gun. Lilbuns C. Cummings of Prospect, Me., says he has one of the oldest guns in the country. It is a flintlock, wrought from barrelled king's arm, bearing the inscription "Georgius Secundus Rex. A. D. 1788." The barrel is 46 inches long, and the gun weighs 11 pounds 10 ounces. The gun has been in his family since 1759, when his great grandfather carried it up the heights of Abraham under Wolfe and helped to capture Quebec from the French. It was also used in the Revolutionary war, and with it a fox was killed last year.

AMUSEMENTS.

COOK'S. Gus Thomas' clever play, "The Burglar," which held the boards at the Madison Square Theatre, New York, part of one season, and made a most emphatic hit, is the attraction at Cook's Opera House the first half of next week. The play is one of absorbing interest, and the opening scene is laid in the home of opulence, showing the daily intercourse between the exiled members of a refined family and only managed by the young husband's too frequent absence. Into this peaceful existence a thunder-clap falls, in the shape of a discovery that the husband's mysterious disappearance has developed into the knowledge by some of the household members of a dual life on his part. He is at one and the same time a reputable member of society and famous burglar. The play is excellently mounted and performed by a fine company.

It is doubtful whether among the many romantic dramas produced in the last century, there is one possessed of more opportunity for strong dramatic action, stirring situations, and a story of absorbing interest, than Alexander Dumas' masterpiece, "The Three Guardsmen." Paul Caseneuve, the romantic actor, who will essay the role of D'Artagnan in the forthcoming production of "The Three Guardsmen" at the Cook the latter part of next week is a young actor who has already won recognition in the arduous role.

ACADEMY.

The attraction for the coming week at the Academy will be Josephine Mills' Dramatic Company in a fine scenic production of the popular play "Master and Man." The star of the organization, Josephine Mills, is a study of versatile talents who has made an excellent reputation in the west by her conscientious work and undoubted powers as an emotional actress. "Master and Man" is one of the best of the sensational English melodramas bearing on the question of capital and labor—the peculiar relationship between mill owner and workman serving as the basis of an intrigue by a villain in his endeavor to wreck the lives of a loving heroine and her many loved hero. One of the most thrilling situations in the play is the blast furnace scene, where the villain is about to be thrown into the flames by a mob of enraged workmen—the realism of this exciting effect being sensational in the extreme.

WONDERLAND THEATRE.

The new American Biographic now on exhibition at Wonderland is a big winner by a large majority as was attested by the immense crowds that visited that favorite theatre during the past week. The other views to be shown are the 13th Infantry U. S. A., blankets court martial Governors Island, caught in the act, the prodigal's return—3 a. m., the prodigal's return—3 a. m. reversed, the pickaninny's bath. Empire State express.
