

FATHER KOENIG'S NERVE TONIC The Best Recommendation. I was paralyzed partially in 1885, was treated by the best physicians in New York and Philadelphia, but got no relief until I took Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic about 9 months ago, since then not only relief and strength, such speedy effect after such protracted afflictions is the best recommendation for the Tonic. W. A. Bigney, Rev. G. E. Jones in a letter from Chicago, Mich., that the sick still regained a sound sleep and good appetite and her mind improved, so her mother is very thankful for the remarkable effect of Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic.

Free This Month. Knowing that the unfortunate have been imposed upon by the unprincipled pretender, who charge largely in advance, DR. GRADY Has adopted this plan that he will charge nothing for advice, consultation or treatment until the patient pronounces himself well. The only charge being made is for medicines used during treatment.

DR. GRADY MORE CURES. The first and second degrees were conferred on nine candidates by Auburn Council No. 807, Knights of Columbus, on Tuesday evening. The degree work was conducted by the officers of Seneca Falls Council upon invitation of Grand Knight Conway of Auburn. Mr. Ryan of Tremont Council, Boston, also assisted in the work. The Auburn knights and knights from surrounding towns enjoyed a clam bake on Oswego lake Wednesday. It is needless to say that the occasion was made a memorable one.

The improvements on the exterior of St. Mary's church, go on steadily. Plans of apprehension which were sent skyward during the past week, by timid pasters-by, to whom the skeleton of wood work on which the steeple rested, seemed hardly adequate for its support, have given way to looks of admiration and approval as the work advances and the chaste and graceful style of the windows becomes evident.

THEY WILL GIVE ALL. TWO NOBLE WOMEN DEVOTE THEIR LIVES TO GOOD WORKS.

Mme. Constance Mallman, a countess of Prussia, and her gifted daughter, Miss Marie Mallman, are soon to forsake the vanities and pleasures of this world and take refuge in cloister cells as brides of the order of the Visitation. All their wealth—which is great—and a fine estate at New Brighton, N. Y., will be given as a dowry to the sisterhood. A convent is now being built on this estate at Mme. Mallman's expense, and within its walls Archbishop Corrigan will receive the two women into the order.

The ceremony will bring together an imposing gathering of Catholic notables who are proud to call Mme. Mallman friend. Archbishops, bishops, provincial generals of the regular orders and distinguished secular priests have celebrated mass in the beautiful chapel which adjoins the great reception room. In this reception room have met many lights of the church, even as in olden days the leaders of Catholicism gathered in the salon of her grand old home in Dusseldorf, Rheinish Prussia.

Mme. Mallman boasts her kinship to the grand old Catholic house of Wisthof. She refers to her rank and power in Germany as things of the dead past. Yet when her attention was called to a grand oil painting of a distinguished looking man, embellished with orders which hang with other masterpieces in her reception room she said: "He was my—a long pause—dear friend, one who played his part in European politics and upon whom the emperor's favor was never closed."

The beautiful house was built on Brighton heights. The grounds were laid out under madam's own critical eye. Her household goods were imported from Germany, her thoroughbred horses came, too, and there was no prettier show place on Staten Island.

Mme. Mallman is herself an alumna of the famous old Academy of the Sacred Heart, in Westphalia. Her two daughters are graduates of the Sacred Heart academy at Manhattanville. They, like their mother, were deeply religious and joined her when she went abroad on missions of charity to the poor.

The beginning of the renunciation of these four women from the world began when the elder daughter, Gabrielle, decided to become a madam of the order of the Sacred Heart. They missed Miss Gabrielle very much in that home, and a year afterward Miss Marie decided upon a religious life. There were several obstacles to overcome, however, but all were cleared away when the city of Brooklyn purchased the home of the Sisters of the Visitation at Parkville, N. Y., and Archbishop Corrigan invited the order into his jurisdiction and Mme. Mallman and her daughter offered their fortune and beautiful estates to provide a home for it.
