TYRONE.

Edendork '98 Centeaary Committee held a rousing meeting on Sunday evening last, Mr. Peter Skeffington in the chair. Several new members having been enrolled Mr. James Toner, Coalisland, addressed the meeting on the sacrifices made by the men in 1798. He was glad to see indications of a united Ireland soon again. That was a sign that unity was fast coming. There, in Edendork, they had taken their stand to prove to the world that they were in concert with any truly inteh movement, and there could hardly be a movement more Irish than the movement to celebrate and to hon or the memories of the heroes of 1798. Those brave men gave up their lives in the patriotic struggle to make Ireland an Ireland of the people's own. try of William Orr, Henry Joy Me-Protestants, was still fresh in the Irish mind, and he hoped the Protestants of the present day would take to heart the lesson those men taught their foes

ROSCOMMON.

At the recent petty sessions courts in Boyle and Frenchpark, there were charges against farmers living near Lough Gara for being engaged in illicit distillation. In the old days the hardy dwellers on the shores of Lough Gara were famed for the excellent brands of "poteen" they turned out, and which as the phrase ran "never knew the smell of a gauger's stick." In these degenerate times "poteen" is almost unknown, and when there is a zonuine find and capture, great curiosity is naturally aroused. At the Boyle petty sessions on Wednesday there was a case heard which disclosed the undoubted capture of a "still" 'n full working order on one of the island; of Lough Gara. The entire apparatus was exhibited, and one of the police who assisted in the capture, Constable Perry, deftly explained to the court how the machine was worked, and the "poteen" extracted. The pot is a masdive one, and above it is the still head, from which the piping, extends that is known as the "worm." When next is applied, and the process is completed, the "mountain dew" trickles from the end of this "worm."

Singing at a Street Corner.

"On our city streets one sees many strange and offlimes touching sights as one goes hurrying along in the pursuit of business or pleasure," said the thoughtful woman. "For instance, one day recently as I stood at a busy corner where car lines crossed each other 1 heard a voice lifted in song. Glancing around, the singer, a little old woman, clad in simple but very decent mourning, was seen seated at the foot of a lamp post near by.

"Altogether different in style from the ordinary corner musician, an air of reserve and gentility clothed the singer, who on closer inspection was found to be blind." And as she turned the crank of a small music box gently, not in the noisy and rapid manner common to the street musician, the thin but pure, sweet old soprano voice was heard chanting the beautiful and comforting words of the beautiful psalm, 'The Lord is My Shepherd.'

"Hundreds were passing, strong of umb and keen of eight, and no doubt a great many of the passes by did not catch the words or even see the singer in her lowly position. Few stopped, and yet what a history of life-with its sorrows and needs, its lights and its shadows! What turn of fortune's wheel or cruel twist of fate had brought this genteel little woman to this lowly and humble way of earning a few pennies to eke out a living? A certain beauty of character must be there to enable the singer to sing, and above all to sing psalms on street corners, even if the day were bright."-Chicago Times-Herald.
