ANIMALS CHANGE COLOR.

Some of the Reasons for it and Some of the Mysteries of it.
Observation and experiment go to show how large an influence food has in determining the color of animals. Everybody knows how easily the color of the yellow canary can be altered to an orange red by mixing cayenne pepper with its food, though it is true that the color change may be produced only in very young birds whose feathers are not completely matured. It is also a matter of experiment that all varieties of canaries are not equally susceptible to the influence of pepper, and it is a very curious fact that the pigment that causes the red color of the pepper be mixed with the food of the bird, without the other constituents, yellow-colored canaries are not in the slightest degree affected by it, while brown birds or the brown feathers of yellow birds become distinctly lighter in hue.

Here is another interesting experiment: The large tortoise-shell butterfly normally feeds upon the leaves of the elm, while the small tortoise-shell is addicted to nettles, but when some imagos of the large tortoise-shell were bred from caterpillars that have been found upon nettles, they showed a wonderful similarity to the smaller species, though the color was nearer that of the larger. Quite in the same line is the observation that the thorn moth exhibits variations in color according as the larva is fed upon oak, Hawthorn, lime or lilac. Many other experiments have shown a similar effect of food in modifying or completely changing the color of animals.

Among the changes of color that are most perplexing, if one would refer their cause to utility only, is that of the gull, which is blue and white, and is therefore generally allowed to be of protective value. But of the first three years of their lives several common species of gull have a brownish speckled plumage, which is totally unlike that of the older birds, on which fact Mr. Beddard remarks: "If one color be advantageous, the other must be the reverse, and three years is either a considerable period, or it is not long enough."

Another perplexing part of the subject is the color of deep-sea animals. It is an established fact that marine animals can and do live at the enormous depth of more than five miles below the surface of the water. It is also certain that the sunlight does not penetrate to that depth, so that the animals that exist there exist in more than midnight darkness. Yet the fact is, that brilliant colorations are generally found in them. Of what use can it be? How can natural selection or sexual selection have anything to do with it? It is true, indeed, that there may be phosphorescent light emitted by the animals themselves; and of this there are many evidences, but though the deep-sea fish may be guided to its prey by a series of natural "bullseye" lanterns, the color of its prey could have no protective effect, but exactly the reverse.

Prevents Vessels Sinking.
A new invention for preventing vessels from sinking after being damaged by collision has been exhibited in London recently before a number of shipping experts. An iron model of a steamer ship was placed in water, after having been loaded with bricks. Then a hole, immense in size compared with the miniature vessel, was opened at the side. When the water had risen to a level with the deck a number of gutta percha bags fixed under the deck were inflated with carbonic acid gas and the vessel almost immediately began to rise.

Earth's Speed Not Uniform.
It is an interesting fact that the earth does not travel at the same rate in all parts of its journey through space. Its orbit being elliptical, it cannot at some time approach nearer to the sun than at others, and will take less time in moving through one part of its path than through another. In winter the earth is nearer the sun than in summer, and moves through space more rapidly.

Mid-Atlantic Mines a Failure.
The recent experiments made by a special commission to ascertain whether the mines laid in the Dardanelles are capable of preventing the passage of ships have proved the utter futility of the present mines, and have shown that the extreme difficulty of laying mines at all on Auburn.

The Christmas services at the Holy Family church were grand and imposing. The decorations were, without doubt, the most elaborate ever seen in the city. The choir assisted by the St. Agnes' choir sang a chorus of fifty voices, all that could be wished for. The sanctus choir sang the responses in a fine manner. Both choirs were under the direction of the organist Miss M. E. Bennett. Four masses were celebrated. The midnight mass was sung by Rev. Father Neville. Rev. Father Hickey preached at this mass in his usual eloquent manner. The children of the parochial school and others remembered the pastor with several handsome Christmas remembrances. Rev. Father Neville and Rev. Father Wall of the Holy Family were each made the recipients of a beautiful silver table service by their pastor, Rev. J. J. Hickey.

Christmas was celebrated here in a most happy manner, as it has been in the past, with many Christmas greetings, and feelings of peace and good will toward all. The first mass was celebrated at 8 o'clock, the second at 10 o'clock, and high mass at 10.30. A 30th anniversary was observed of the soul of Father Maurice, who expired on Christmas day two years ago. The altar presented a handsome appearance, being tastefully decorated with choice plants, lilies, stately palms and carnations. Over the epistle and gospel sides at the altar were placed two designs pressed in green myrtle and moss, with the words "Gloria." The young ladies of the parish, who are always ready to render their welcome aid on these occasions, received their fair share of praise as did also the choir, which rendered some excellent music.

Drove Over After He Was Paralyzed.
Charles J. Joyner, during his lifetime, lived near the head of Crooked Fork valley, in Morgan county, Tenn. He was a man of powerful physical development, brave, fearless and of wonderful endurance. He fought on the Union side during the civil strife, and then after the contention was over he married and went to farming. In some way when a boy the title of "Duke" was given to him, which ever after he was known by.

"Duke" Joyner was a hard worker and a good farmer. One day while building an underdrain, assisted by two small sons, he had a stroke of paralysis and was unable to move, but could talk. "Duke" concluded that he would superintend the operation of taking his half-dead body home. He had the two boys put a log chain around his body. Then he had them put down a couple of planks. Next they hitched the chain to the ox chain and the oxen drew his body up on the wagon. While lying in the wagon "Duke," by the use of his voice, drove the oxen to his house. He survived and lived a number of years after.
