Crude Oil to Kindle Fires.
The Baltimore and Ohio Southern Railway Company for some time has been experimenting with crude oil for kindling fires in locomotives in place of using cordwood, and the results obtained have been so satisfactory that it will hereafter be used on the whole line. During the month of November, 1897, at the company's shops, which are located at Washington, Ind., and Chillicothe, Ohio, 1,236 fires were started with crude oil at a cost of $17.32, or 1.41 cents per fire. To have started the same number of fires with wood would have cost $308, or 24.94 per fire. This represents a saving of $288.62.

Remembrance of a Texas.
A despatch in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat says that few instances have been recalled where men of mature age were forced to learn how to talk, read and write after securing diplomas and honors for proficiency in all three.

Ellis county, Texas, has a man that has learned to talk, read and write twice in his life, and he is just turning the point known as the "prime" of manhood. This man is Dr. O. P. Huston, of Nash. A little over a year ago Dr. Huston received a heavy blow on the head, crushing in a portion of the skull. For a time it was thought he would die. Physicians attended the sufferer, and several months later two or three large pieces of bone were successfully removed from the wound. He began to improve, and finally got so he could walk around. He found it necessary to write, talk and read, but the blow on the head had paralyzed that portion of the brain controlling speech. A score or more of simple words were learned and after a time a very good vocabulary was brought into use. Then the copybook movements were put into use, and the old handwriting returned to him. The student was ambitious; he succeeded.

Before the sad accident to the talented doctor, a young lady had given him her heart, and while he was suffering for months and months, trying to overcome what most people thought death, she clung to him. She had other suitors, and during the time the second schooling was in progress they tried to impress her with their ability to take care of a pretty wife. She refused all offers. Sunday, November 7, at Forrester, in the Presbyterian church, Dr. Huston led to the altar Miss Ines Strickland, the daughter of a well-to-do farmer. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Mr. Kenyon. The bride has long been admired for her beauty and intelligence, and while her marriage was a surprise to some of the majority of her friends, she followed out the promptings of her heart and blessed her for her selection. It seems almost impossible for Dr. Huston to be what he is before the accident, but there is one thing that he can always count on and that is the love of a devoted wife.

Bill Nye's Ayreshire.
The following hitherto unpublished letter from Bill Nye to Frank Carpenter recently appeared in the Boston Herald:

"I am spending the summer on the farm, surrounded by loving friends and colored people who desire to dispose of their blackberries.
"I have discharged my old farm superintendent and secured one in his stead who can play a better game of golf. Farmers must keep abreast of the times or fall behind.
"Crops are looking well. I had quite an experience last week with a new hive of bees, which I bought at Hendersonville, this state. They are called long-waisted or tailor-made bees. I brought the hive home by train this afternoon. The Pullman parlor car conductor was going to put me off, but thought better of it when I set my Queen Anne bees on him. I always hated Pullman anyhow, and only patronize his old lumbering tanks when I need a new cake of soap or a set of hand towels for the home nest.
"The only two people who have succeeded in making anything out of farming in this country are two men who have worked for me and Mr. Vanderbilt for over five years on salary, and who now own a feed store where Mr. Vanderbilt and I are enabled to run an account.
"The joys of farm life keep one young and fresh all the time. I love to romp with the bull and fool him by jumping over the fence a trifle in advance of him. I bought him of a colored brother who called the animal 'Tehi.' Afterward I learned that 'Ayreshire' was what he was trying to ejaculate. 'I shi' seems appropriate, however, and I still use that name, as I came near being shi' a couple of nice children on his account."

Miss Underwood.
Young Lady—I want a pair of garters, please.
Assistant (meditatively)—H'm, let me see.
Young Lady—Sir!
"Well," remarked the comedian, who had been promised a small part after being idle half the season, "even a small role is better than a whole loaf."

A Life Saved.
Marvelous cures of throat and lung affections are made daily by Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. Miss Annie Swan, Petersburg, Va., writes: "My brother was attacked by a bad cough and cold, and it was thought he had consumption. Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup was used, and to our great surprise it made him well and hearty. There is no better cure in the world than this Syrup." Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is sold everywhere for 25 cents.

A FAMOUS SCULPTOR.

GEORGE JULIAN ZOLNAY AND SOME WORKS OF HIS GENIUS.

He Stands in the Front Rank of American Sculptors and His Designs Are Attracting Great Attention in Art Circles—His Part in the World's Fair.

The career of an artist is generally an interesting chain of struggles, hopes and disappointments of which the public little dreams.

What little the public ever knows of these tribulations, it only knows from the history of the few chosen ones who finally succeed. One of these successful artists whose history is of more than usual interest is Mr. George Julian Zolnay, of New York, whose recent successes have brought him to such prominence that he must be considered one of our leading sculptors.

The first of Mr. Zolnay's difficulties was the strong opposition of his family against his making art his profession, but this could not muzzle the impulse of genius. So at the first opportunity he went to Paris to either become a

GEORGE JULIAN ZOLNAY, sculptor in the fullest sense of the word, or to be submerged and disappear in the great current of human struggle.

From Paris he went to Vienna and competed for a place in the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts. After graduating with highest honors from that famous institution, he was commissioned to model a pediment for the Carmelite Church illustrating the verse "Come unto Me all ye who are weary and heavy laden and I will give you rest." The originality of conception and power of execution which this young sculptor displayed in this work foreshadowed the brilliant success he was to achieve in later life. After a short visit to Paris in 1889 he returned to Vienna and while there the American Consul General to the Austrian capital urged him to come to this country and participate in the sculpture work of the Chicago World's Fair. Mr. Zolnay at once seized with enthusiasm this suggestion. His original intentions were to do the sculpture work in Chicago and then return to Europe. But before he got through with his work he had become identified with the people and the country, and he decided to remain here.

However, Chicago not being congenial after the exposition, he returned to New York, which has remained his home.

In 1896 he entered the competition for the large monument to be erected in Galveston, Tex., representing the history of the Texas Revolution of 1836. This was the first work that brought Mr. Zolnay prominently before the public. The press of the whole country recognized in most flattering terms Mr. Zolnay's remarkable power.

His next work was a series of musicals, Beethoven, Mozart, Schuman, Chopin, in which his constant tendency to portray the spiritual was so strongly revealed that to-day these statues are considered the best portraits ever made of these heroes of the musical realm.

When modeling the musicians' the necessity for some material which should be a worthy substitute for bronze and marble presented itself more strongly than ever before, and Mr. Zolnay took up the thread of his former experiments and succeeded in giving to the world a compound for statuary which, it is predicted, will give sculpture work a popularity which it has not enjoyed since the times of Phidias. It is as durable as stone or bronze and as beautiful, but it reduces the cost of production to a minimum. In the early spring of this year Mr. Zolnay was offered a part of the work of the Nashville Centennial Exposition. While doing the large statues for the Centennial, he heard of the pathetic story of Sam Davis, the Confederate scout, who preferred to sacrifice his life rather than betray a friend.

The heroism of the young southerner, so appealed to Zolnay's mind that he at once determined to make a bust of the hero. When exhibited in the Parthenon it was a revelation to the people, who saw their ideal of manliness, courage and self sacrifice embodied in marble. This work revealed more than many of Zolnay's creations. His strong personality and his extraordinary power of portraying the soul and all that is noble and elevating in human nature. His success was instantaneous. After leaving Nashville Mr. Zolnay was entrusted with the execution of the pediment of the new buildings of the University of Virginia, and the trustees are so enthusiastic over his work that they contemplate having him make some fifteen statues in the beautiful, marble-like compound he has discovered.

RASHNESS REWARDED.

Dangerous Duty Assigned to a Soldier Who Did Not Obey.

Lejeune, the brilliant, side-de-camp of the Marquis Berthier, Davout and Oudinot, gives a very interesting account of his first achievement on the field of battle. The French army was crossing the Alps, and found itself compelled to attack, at a great disadvantage, a town which the Austrians were defending.

Young Lejeune, who was anxious to participate in the engagement, was greatly disappointed when he was ordered to remain at his post in the rear. When the firing began his heart beat furiously, and as the attack progressed he felt that he could not remain passive while his fellow-soldiers were performing deeds of valor.

Believing himself unnoticed, he hurried forward, forgetting that the soldier's first duty is obedience, and just where the fray seemed to be thickest he found himself face to face with his commanding officer. The General looked at the rash young soldier coldly.

"Since you have quit your post," he said, "you may take this order and recall that company that has got into a bad position."

Lejeune heard the order with a strange sensation; for this was an errand from which he was not likely to return alive. There was no escape, however, and touching his cap, he started on his perilous mission with a quaking heart.

For some distance he crept along behind a pile of rocks that protected him from the fire of the enemy, but at last this shelter came to an end. Before him there remained 100 steps to be taken under the fire of 300 guns pointed straight at him!

To go forward was, he believed, certain death. To go back would be eternal disgrace. The whole army seemed like an amphitheatre around him. Should he prove himself a coward or a hero?

"If I die," thought he, it will be only the just penalty of my disobedience; if I accomplish my mission I shall have proved that I am worthy yet to fight in the Emperor's army."

So thinking, he rushed across the open space amid a storm of cannon ball and musket shot. Not one of the murderers of death touched him, and as if by a miracle he arrived safe and sound in the French lines. The delivery of that order saved the battalion, and decided the destiny of the young officer.

The Hog Population.

There are 40,600,276 hogs in this country, not counting the human variety, and they are worth $106,272,770, an average of $4.10 per head. Iowa is the banner hog State with 3,787,970 and an average value of $5.67. Missouri is second, with 3,074,329; and Texas is third, with 2,944,068. The State with the least number of hogs in it is Nevada, with 11,126, an average of one hog to every four persons in the State. New York has 632,524 hogs of an average value of $6.81. The highest priced hog is found in Connecticut, where his average value is $9.29, and the State carries in stock 53,737 head of this elegant specimen. Ohio is well to the front with 2,284,463, and Rhode Island trails all over with 14,280, of an average value of $7. Illinois, in which State Chicago is located, has 2,249,401. The lowest priced hog is a native of Florida and his average is but $2.02. He is the famous razor back, and he can root up the fifth row of corn through the cracks in the fence.
