CHIEF RED CLOUD.

EPISODES IN THE CAREER OF A VERY MISCHIEVOUS INDIAN.

He Was the Most Influential Medicine Man During the Last Uprising—How He Used His Power—His Shack on the Ogallala Reservation.

Red Cloud is the single survivor of that famous coterie of Sioux Indian leaders of which Old-Man-Afraid-of-His-Horses, Spotted Tail and Sitting Bull helped to make history on the western prairies.

Perhaps the most notorious piece of work in which Red Cloud took a hand was the capture of the Little Bighorn in 1876. He was one of the few Indians who were left to stand on the battlefield after the battle.

But for the fact that Red Cloud had been a very successful peace-maker, he would have been killed by the government. He was a man of great power and influence.

When the Sioux and Cheyennes rebelled against the invasion of gold seekers in the Black hills in 1876, Red Cloud did not go on the war path.

It was in consideration of "Old Red's" absence from the theater of conflict that the government built the warrior a substantial two-story frame house at Pine Ridge and painted it white.

Red Cloud watched the construction of his house with satisfied curiosity. He figured that it was a sort of payment for his services.

Red Cloud was a very old man when the Sioux war of 1890 flared the west with alarm. Those who were in that campaign well remember him as bent and tottering, wrapped in a long, faded purple overcoat and baggy trousers.

Burke, Fitz Simons, Hone & Co.

Florence Nightingale's dolls all enjoyed very indifferent health. Time and again disease stalked through the nursery and laid the dolls so low that their lives were quite despaired of.

When, at 14 years of age, George Sand heard some one laugh at the idea of so big a girl still playing with dolls, like Jane Welsh, she decided to give them up.

The most magnificent palaces built by man for dwelling places sink into insignificance when compared with some of the houses constructed by insects. An interesting example is the brickmaker, who lays bricks with the skill of a mason.

The following game is very amusing as well as instructive:—Any number of persons may play. First choose a leader, and give him a United States map. Then provide the other parties with paper and pencil.

Miss Strongminded—Mamma, how did papa act when he proposed to you? Mrs. Strongminded—He didn't act at all. He just stood in the corner and said yes.
