KITES AND KITE FLYING.

You Can Build One That Will Sail in the

Almost every box who ever owned a jackknife and lived near a vacant lot has made kites of some sort. Most of these have been of the old flat. shield-shaped kind, weighted with long tails and needing a good bit of wind to sail them. Often it required the united efforts of a whole company of boys and an afternoon of experiment to get the kite properly balanced and floating steadily above the treetops. I rememher that we used to braid iron weeds and wisps of grass into the tail, and sometimes we would have a long streamer of this nature—ten or fifteen | feet in length-trailing behind the kite, and then if the wind died down suddenly this heavy tail would drag like an anchor and bring our flying toy thumping to the ground away off. This usually tangled the guide twine in the trees and telegraph wires and the kite was often ruined.

Since grown men began experimenting with kitemaking for scientific purposes, however, the tailless kite has puts his mind to it." been invented, and any bright boy can build one that will sail in the lightest; wind and float to the ground like a parachute. The accompanying picture shows how the contrivance looks at close observation, but no picture can give a faithful idea of the grace of the kite when it is sailing at the end of hand with him to lick 'em off the face

HE COULDN'T HELP IT

A corporal in one of the regiments down at Chickemauga Park had become entangled with a difficulty, and as a result of it, added to an accumulation of similar such, he was called to appear before the colonel of the regiment. "Corporal Jenkins," said that officer, severely, "you are a fine soldier and a sensible man, and you ought to conduct yourself differently,"

"I was drunk, sir," explained the corporal, very contritely.

"That is no excuse. Don't you know It is wrong to get drunk?" "Yes, sir," admitted the corporal, without cavil. "Then why do you do it?". "I can't belp it, sir."

"You cannot excuse your fault that way, sir," said the colonel sternly. You know you can if you want to." "But I can't, sir."

"Yes, you can," insisted the colonel." "A man can belp doing anything if he

The corporal stood up straight and saluted.

"Beggin' your pardon, sir," he said but do you think when I heard that Uncle Sam had got into a scrap with them dirty cigaroot-smokin' Spannyards and was askin' his boys to take a of the earth that I could help dropping everything right then and there and grapbin' up a gun and takin' a hold with the old man and the other boys? Say, colonel, do you think a man about my size could help doin' just what I done and bein right here ready when ne mays the word?"

The colonel was stumped for an instant. Then he got up and took the corporal's hand.

"Get out of this," he said harriedly; "get out, and if you ever get drunk again I'll have you put in the guard house and nailed up until the war is Hor Ultimatum.

"There is one thing I want distinctly inderstood." said the only daughter of the household, as she cornered her pacents and looked as though she were saving a proclamation of war. "I want no more interference in my affairs as, lar as the young men who come here ire concerned. I'm old enough to excroise my own judgment and form my own opinions. You two act very much io me as though you thought some roung man was trying to marry the whole family, and that it develved upon you to make a satisfactory selection. You have succeeded in running off two or three for whom I had a special likng, and now I call a balt. That's my iltimatum."

"See here, my young lady," began he father. But that was as far as he proceeded. He was curtly informed that young men did not call to get his thances of a war with Spain, or the advantages offered by Michigan for the peet sugar industry. They had access to the newspapers, and read all the news that it cost millions of dollars to collect. He did not amount to any more than a tin whistle at a hand tournament.

"Elizabeth, I'll not permit any such alk to your father. I guess we know what is best for you and we certainly nave your welfare at heart. I give you o distinctly understand-"
