Seneca Falls.

Resolution of the firm the two brothers executed their respective wills, each giving to the other in the event of death all his possessions. These wills were never changed, and it has shown the great love between the two brothers. Mr. McCartin was honored and respected by all who knew him. The entire community deeply regret his death. The deceased was a member of the Ancient Order of Hibernians. The funeral was held Saturday morning at 8.30 o'clock from St. Patrick's church. A solemn requiem mass was celebrated by Rev. Father Dwyer, deacon, Father Nelligan of Cayuga; sub-deacon, Rev. Father O'Connor. The remains were taken to Redwood for interment.

SIX SHORT SAYINGS.

What a wonderful being is man! He admits it himself.

"We don't want the earth. If we had the whole earth, we should not need a navy to defend it."

A woman considers herself happy when she lives two years in one and grows six months older the while.

Man is the architect of his own fortune, which accounts for some of these Venetian facades on human woodsheds.

Where ignorance is bliss 'tis folly to be wise. If a man isn't a judge of good whiskey his drinks don't cost him so much.

No man generally speaking, has too great a future to be held in the little hands of a woman.

Do Not Want Scenery Spoiled. It is said that many people in Maine are so offended at the advertisements painted on boards and barns along the country roads that they refuse to deal with firms which so advertise.

Napoleon's Trees. Napoleon's cabbage palm at Longwood has been blown down. It was the last tree of its kind on the island of St. Helena, and the species has not been found elsewhere.

Pumice-Stone Boat. A lifeboat made of pumice-stone has been tested. It continued afloat with a load even when full of water.

McKinley Warned the Vatican. London. The Rome correspondent of the Daily Chronicle says he learns that the Vatican's declaration of neutrality was due to a notification from Washington that no manifestation of sympathy with Spain would be tolerated.

Gray horses are the longest-lived and cream-colored ones are the most delicate, being unable to stand very warm weather.

Spain has more sunshine than any other country in Europe, the yearly average being 3,000 hours.

Under British rule the cotton crop of Egypt has doubled, and now amounts to over 500,000,000 pounds a year.

In Abyssinia not so very long ago salt was the principal medium of exchange, being practically used as money.

The Italian criminologist, Dr. Ferrana, found that of 2,000 juvenile criminals 1,112 were idlers. The prevailing crime was theft, being 1,182 of the whole.

A London specialist says the most expensive drug is called phosphygmine, an ounce of which would cost nearly $1,000,000. It is prepared from the Calabar bean, and is used in diseases of the eye.

The codfish industry of Newfoundland is the largest of its kind in the world, and has been in existence nearly four centuries. The annual export amounts to an average of 1, 350,000 hundredweight.

SOLAR FACTS AND FIGURES.

Matter weighing one pound on the moon's surface if transferred to the earth would weigh six pounds.

If the sun was to be divided into smaller planets it would make 1,310,000, each the size of the earth.

The Sale of the Bennett Stock of Dry Goods At J. Fahy & Co.'s

Is the Dry Goods event of the city. Under no other circumstances could staple, useful and desirable goods be sold so much under market prices.

62 Cents on the Dollar

For a jobber's stock of Dry Goods that were never placed on a retail shelf until opened here three days ago, is something rare to see.

This explains the crowds at the sale on Wednesday and will account for the rush to-day. There are Men's Goods, Millinery Goods, Cloaks, Housekeeping Goods, Flannels and Blankets, Underwear, Upholstery and Curtain Goods and all such articles now of necessity.

While the assortment is intact we want all our old customers to have a share in this Bennett sale.

ROUGH RIDER'S STORIES.

Tales Told By Cavalrymen While Seated Around the Camp Fire.

A group of Rough Riders of Troop G were discussing the events of the fight at La Guasimas as they were camped on the plateau they had so dearly won.

It was bright moonlight, but there was already a slight chill in the air, and the handful of fires dotted here and there among the shelter tents looked cheerful.

Most of the men were sleeping soundly, and their deep breathing sounded curiously distinct in the pauses in the conversation. One could hear, too, the tread of the sentry on the gravel in the road below and the rattle of the thickly lying cartridge belts as he kicked them aside in his walks.

"I'd have given six months' pay and a pound of smokin' tobacco to have been in my milk cellar on my ranch," said a third. "George Roland was near me when he was hit, and I thought my time had come, sure. Then we passed that L. Troop trumpeter the next rush. Who's seen Haffner? Some one said he was wounded."

"Killed," said the first speaker, and there was silence for a minute.

Around headquarters there was no story-telling that night. Everybody was thinking about the battle and of those who had fallen. Forgetfulness had not yet come. Allyn Capron's death seemed a personal loss to each one of his brother officers. Each one had something to say that showed his admiration and affection for the gallant young soldier. Church broke down as he told of his last moments.

"I'm done for," he had said, when they raised him up. "You can't help me. Old man— to Dr. Church—won't you—please write to my wife?" Then, as he was suffering intense pain, the surgeon administered cocaine, and he became mercifully unconscious.

"It was the death he would have chosen," said one. "He was a soldier through and through."

But a few days later the dead appeared to be forgotten. I say "appeared," they were held no less in affectionate remembrance in one sense, but amid such scenes as are enacted in war one lives years in a few days. The events of a week ago seem wonderfully remote, and one's sensibilities become dulled. It is well that it is so.

Describing one of his Western neighbors, Colonel Roosevelt said, "He was a man of large and liberal views. He had no foolish and puerile prejudices against virtue. Some people didn't believe in arson," he would reason. "Well, that was entirely their own affair. No reason why I should quarrel with them on that account or hold myself above them."

An anecdote he told me with keen relish was of two "bad men" who "shot it out" with Winchester rifles on the main street of Medora. One of them fell with a bullet in his hip, his rifle dropping out of reach. His antagonist was aiming for the coup de grace when he felt a touch on his arm. Looking around, he saw a meek and venerable old person called "Uncle Billy," who gained his livelihood by sweeping out a saloon, cleaning the cuspidors and serving an occasional
