DUBLIN.

At the scientific meeting of the Royal Dublin Society lately, Mr. Holmes Pollock, B. Sc., read a paper on the Kieselguhr of County Antrim. The usmosit, he said, was very extensive, and might be more generally worked. The market value of it in the raw state was 2 £2 per ton. The source of the deposit was the flood water of Lough Neagh, the bottom of which was covered so I thickly with the material that if it could be availed of it would realize $ £150,000,000. Floating bricks used by 3 the Romans, could be made from it, , and would be useful in the lining of L bulkheads in steamships.
