Mr. Roderick J. McDermott, of Belmagare, aged 87 years, died Sept. 13 in the Mount St. Joseph Abbey, Roscrea, County of Tipperary. He was a member of the illustrious Irish family of McDermott. His remains were interred in the Abbey cemetery.

During past few weeks several cyletions were carried out on the estate of Mr. James Owens presided. Present: Lord de Freyne, at Fairymount. The Castlerea District Council has given some of the families relief. In one case five children were flung upon the road. Their father is in England trying to earn the rent. The new church in Castlerea is a grand example of the love of the people for their religion, and of their whole-hearted generosity. It is named after the Apostle of Erin. Beautiful in exterior appearance, interiorly it is street is the principal entrance in cut stone, and surmounted by a tracery window thirty feet high, and on the north, or town, side is a graceful tower 100 feet high. The most striking features within are the transept arches. (f) feet high, spanning from pier to pier 124 feet, with a surprising lightness and grace. The High Altar, consecrated on Rosary Sunday, is the gift of the Children of Mary, and is a triumph of church decorative art. In Gothic style. It is of caenstone and colored marble. The antipendium represents the Annunciation. The Pillarisare is of Connemara marble, the Capitalo, highly carved in natural foliage, support a Carrara marble slab. The Tabernacle, in similar material, incloses a highly embossed brass safe. The reredos is a work of exceptional merit. The central panel is the Crucifixion, with figures of the Blessed Virgin on each side, with life-size figures of SS. Peter and Paul. An arcade of rich tracery fills the entire middle of the sympanum with highly carved crockets of Taurane, County Mayo, aged 24 and finials reaching the base of the years. chancel window, consisting of five of noture and harmonize with each other. In the erection of St. Patrick's care has been taken to preserve local ights. The side altars are of similar traditions and the memory of the saints of the parish. On the north transent window is a representation of the arch-Druid Oona, presenting his patrick. palace to St. Patrick as a gift to the mew diocese of Elphin. On the other window is the baptism by St. Patrick of the two princesses, Ethnea and Fidilmia at the well of Qogula. On Sept. 12, the beautiful church of Hirntown, lately purchased out in fee imple, was concentrated by the Bishop of the Diocese Right Rev Dr Browne. The consecration of a church in a land where Catholics are only recovering from penal laws is no common event. 'the Bishop commences by reciting the teven Penitential Psalms by the relics of the saints to be inserted in the aliar He proceeds to the outside of the main entrance, and the Litany of the Saints is chanted. He then blesses salt and water and makes the circuit of the church blessing the walls and cemetery. Then he halts and knocks at the door with his crozier, saying: "Lift up your gates, ye princes, and be we lifted up, we everlasting doors, and the King of Glory shall enter in." deacon within answers, "Who is this King of Glory?" to which the Bishop outside replies. "The Lord, strong and mighty; the Lord, mighty in battle." He then makes a second and a third circuit of the church before ontering, upon which the "Veni Creator Spiritus" and the "Cantile Benedictus" are sung by the assisting clerical choir The Bishop writes on forty-seven small heaps of ashes, which are arranged in the form of a Greek Cross from corner to corner of the church, the letters of the Latin and Greek alphabets. This is to symbolize the instruction of the newly baptized in the elements of faith and plety.fl

The Bishop next blesses a mixture of sprinkles the walls of the church with-He then proceeds to Consecrate the ial-and when this is completed the bishop and entire body of clergy present proceed to the place where the holy relics repose, and carry them in solemn procession through the church, where the Bishop is to insert them in the Altar on which Mass is to be celebrated. Before continuing it is usual dress an Allocution to the people on the duty of paying tithes and publish the Decrees of the Council of Trent. When the relice have been sealed up the new altar clothe and various ornaments for the altar are brought to him and he blesses them. Then the Mass begins, celebrated by the Bishop him-
