At Gettysburg, more men were killed than in any other battle of the civil war: 3,070 Union soldiers fell. 2,592 Confederates, a total of 5,662; those who died of wounds are not included. The total Federal death list of the war was 359.528; the Confederate losses amounted to 133,735. The bloodiest battle of the Franco-Prussian war was Gravelotte, fought Aug. 18, 1870; the Germans lost 4,449 killed and mortally wounded, the French much less, though no figures are kept; the total German losses of the war were 28,277 killed and died of wounds; the total French losses, though greater, are not known.
