behold a great gray structure with six towers overshadowing the green city on the foothills, and seeming in its majestic simplic. ity and grandeur to rival the mountains which lie behind it.

Only the elect may know the secrets that are held in this Mormon temple. only one who can bring with him a sertificate that he has faithfully served the Mormon church in his youth and manhood, that he has obeyed the voice of the priesthood—and, what is more important, has paid a tenth of his enraings to the church-may enter its portale and learn its mysteries.

Those who have been within its walls will whisper of visions they have een and wonders they have learned. and will speak in awe of te heavenly things it brings near to the earth. But, for the unfaithful who may visit Salt Lake City there is only a glimpse of grant granite walls, of an all seeing eye in gold carved above a high door. and of lawns and flowers within a forbidden mud wall which encloses its grounda.

Here are practically the most sacred nites of the Mormon Church. Here the mortal beings may be baptised in the name of their ancestors long dead, and so give those ancestors an oppormaity to enter into the higher glory which is to be attained only through the efforts of the followers of Joseph. maith. Here wies are sealed to hushands, not alone for this earth, but for the whole countless years of eternity. Here the young Mormon learns the secrets of his faith, the doctrines for which the world is not yet prepared and which are not to be stated to the unbeliever. Here, also, is the meeting place of the priesthood of the murch, the sacred hall where the leaders are supposed to gain their revelations direct from God and transmit than to the teachers of the people.

a room still further on on the same floor, and the novitistes are told that they are about to enter upon the chamber which in a human way illustrates the glory of the highest salvation-the celestial kingdom, which is to the terrestrial kingdom as the sun is to the moon.

Every human temptation to enter upon this glory is held out to the novitiate. Europe and America have been searched over to add to teh luxury of this apartment. Thick velvet carpets, like those of the palaces of the Orient, cover the floors. Divans are scattered about over the floors. and covered with the richest of fabrics. Heavy hangings of almost priceless material are draped from the high ceiling to the floor, sweeping down to shut out the light of the windows, Great Greek columns arise from the floor almost to the celling, forty feet above, and some are surmounted with the busts of the presidents of the Church the men who in the schemes of Mormon salvation are to take their places among the gods and to be rulers of earthe created for them and their descendants. Busts of Joseph Smith. Brigham Young and John Taylor were in place when the Temple was dedicated, and the oast of Wilford" Woodruff has since been placed on a fourth column.

On the ceiling is a symbolic representative of the joys to be derived from entrance into the celestial kingdom. It is covered throughout its whole extent with representations of fruits and flowers, made true to nature by sculpture and coloring. Standing below, the effect is one of the greatest richness and profusion, which is intensified by the brilliant, yet soft light of the numerous electric, globes, which throw their light on the ceiling, to be reflected thence to the floor below. In his journey through these apartments the Mormon novitiate has learned many things which are not for the world to know, and which he may not reveal without breach of oaths of most solemn portent. He has learned signs that will always enable him to tell when he meets one of the faithful. He has gained a new idea of his faith and a conception of the principles which make the Mormons "a peculiar people," and, moreover, he is fitted to enter into the other mysteries that are hidden in the great building.

The Hely of Holics.

He is free to so from the celestial room now and to enter upon the "holy of holies." the altar room in which men and women are married for time and eternity. Here it is that the ties binding in heaven must be made, When the Mormon man takes a wife or wives unto himself he kneels at an aftar made of wood cut from one of the sacred spots in Mormon legend. When married here the ties do not end aithful to his counse be raised for glory in the world to come Marriages made here may be dissolved only by the priesthood that solemnized them, recognizing as binding upon those who pretend to represent God upon earth to-day.

We were taken by our guides over the course through which the Mormon young men and young women pass when they are about to receive the endowment robes, which they are always wear and which in their after years mark them as apart from the other people of the world. We found that in entering the building they are first wiken to a large room, perhaps fifty fost square, whose walls of white are relieved only by the minutest lines of cold.

Whis in its simplicity is supposed to weify the conditions from which God millt the universe-finding nothing but mace from which to gather the elements of which he fashioned worlds and suns. The novitiate here learns of the belief of his Church in the spirit world as a reality, of God's plan to pass all spirits through "tabernacies of fesh," to prepare them for greater works in peopling other worlds in Hie universe, and of His building of the earth for the glorification of his faith. ### Mysteries of Heaven

Leaving this room the novice leaves the realism of the earth and begins to enter upon the mysteries of the Mormon heaven. He passes into a room painted like the one he has left, but with an idea entirely different. The peaceful scene has given way to one of chaos. The gentle waterfall has given way to a torrent that dashes madly over rocks. The trees of the corest are bent and swept by a tremendous storm. Clouds are sweeping ever the sky. The lion is raging against the weaker animals, the hawk is pursuing the smaller birds. Manbind is all at war with his fellow creamres and even his own kin.

This is the salvation reserved for ituse who have heard the gospel of the Mormons and have not hearkened to the voices of the creachers. It is terrestrial kingdom, in which Gere is no love, no mercy, but only dire tribulation. Those who people it the servants of the servants of the servants of the bigher salvation.

From this room one passes up stairs higher kingdoms of the heavens. He frot enters into a room in which all the effects are subdued.
