ALL SHOULD LABOR

TO LEAD THOSE OUTSIDE THE CHURCH TO KNOW THE TRUTH.

Duties of Catholics Towards Their Non-Catholic Neighbors--Laymen and Clergy Should Unite in the Great Apostolate of America's Conversion.

Every Catholic layman, as well as priest, ought to be concerned about the conversion of non-Catholics. He knows that he holds the truth; that his Church alone was instituted by Christ; that Christ obliged all men to belong to the true Church, and that as a consequence those outside the fold are, to say the least, running a great risk of losing their souls. He, of course, very well understands the difference between being outside the fold voluntarily and being in good faith, as they say; still, taking into account the frequent carelessness in the administration tion of baptism by the Protestant sects, the absence of the many Catholic aids towards salvation, especially the Sacrament of Penance, the exterior righteousness which Protestants seem only to look after, and making all allowance for the great mercy of God, he is anxious even about those whose sincerity is undoubted. Charity will thus urge him to do something for those who have not received so many of the blessings of Providence as himself.

But how will a Catholic proceed to get converts? The means which Almighty God sometimes adopts to bring straying sheep to the Fold are the simplest. Often the edifying life of a Catholic neighbor, a visit to a Protestant house into which sickness has entered, a kindness shown, are the occasions of conversion to the true Faith. Cardinal Gibbons gives a very striking instance of the ways of Providence in this matter: "The wife of a prominent lawyer received not many years ago a box of spring goods, expressed to her from a neighboring city. Several Catholic newspapers had been made use of for wrapping. They presented somewhat of a novelty to the lady's eye, and she laid them aside for a time. Some time afterwards, one of the papers contained some lines relative to Catholicism, which awoke in her intelligent mind a desire for further inquiry. Suffice to say that she sought and found in our holy Faith what her soul longed for, and in a few months her husband and family were one with her in religious belief."

The great difficulty one meets in the work of conversion is the result of prejudice. Protestants have formed certain ideas about Catholic teaching which have no foundation in fact. These false impressions of Catholicism from their parents, or more generally from Protestant preachers. Of the latter Cardinal Moran writes the following: "No words can be found too coarse or too violent for some Protestant divines when combating the Church's errors and abuses. They speak of their own imagination; they call it the Catholic Church; they hurl against it the thunders of their fiercest denunciations, and when that vain phantom is smitten they would fain persuade the deluded dupes that the Catholic Church is overthrown. Hence their great and most judicious statement that the Catholic Church teaches."

The chief points of Catholic doctrine upon which Protestant prejudice has built up erroneous views are: Devotion to Blessed Virgin Mary, Infallibility of the Pope, the Sacrament of Penance or Confession, Indulgences, Venerations of Statues and Images. The Protestants notions about the religious life that were so common in days gone by are now removed forever by the presence of the divorced women everywhere in and in many of the country districts. Many Protestants are now convinced that their daughters can nowhere learn the lessons of virtue as well as in Catholic convent schools.

Secondly, present your Protestant friends with a book treating of Catholic teaching. Happily, such books are now numerous and within the reach of every Catholic layman. We would recommend the following (any of which can be obtained for one shilling): "Faith of Our Fathers," by Cardinal Gibbons; "Catholic Belief," by Short Cut to the Catholic Church," by End of Religious Controversy," by B. Muncey.

the fetters from his feet; he feels as light and as free as the fresh air, and he would chirp and sing as the bird."
Newman's words ought to inspire us with zeal towards the conversion of our non-Catholic neighbors: "Oh!
long sought after, tardily found,
dearest of the eyes, joy of the heart,
truth after many shadows, the fulness
after many thirsts, the home after many stormy; come to help, poor sinners, for the time is, and the alone who can unfold the meaning of your being and the secret of your destiny."

FENIANISM.

A Brief History of the Organization and of
Some of Its Valiant Leaders.

Conclusion.
Such conduct has no example in modern times among statesmen." He is rather substantiated in this by the favor shown on the part of the American rulers to Stephens in 1864, when he again visited the States. As "Captain Daley," the passes of the war Department gave him safe conduct from one end of the armies to the other.

In the latter part of '63 a Congress of the Fenian Brotherhood was held at Chicago. It was an epoch in its history. Delegations attended from all the Northern States, from Canada and from the Federal armies. It aimed at expansion. The Head Centreship was henceforth to be an elective office. A council of ten were to assist the chief.

and other measures adopted were to make the organization more efficient. But unfortunately an element was developed in it which two years later caused a division of the Brotherhood into two wings. Even so could there have been concert of action its power would not have been wasted, and its resources that could have been concen-traced in giant power, would have struck at England a series of quick and devastating blows for the independence of Ireland, to the admiration of the world. I know I am not at all alone in this view. The lamented John Doyle O'Reilly, who was a Fenian in Ireland, England and America, said as late as 1884 of the organization: "Fenianism was the most powerful force of Irishmen that ever conspired against Great Britain." The 68d Congress declared Stephens "the supreme organizer of the Irish race." It seemed injurious to the writer that shortly after the deliberations of Chicago he should lished in Dublin a news journal called "The Irish People," notwithstanding the existence of many patriotic papers all over the land ready to serve the cause.

One effective result of the Chicago onblave was the establishment of a 'enian Sisterhood, which rendered excellent service to the cause in the states.

With the public prestige that the organization was attaining in America, and the reference thereto through the papers of Ireland and England, the work of honey-combing the British army and navy went on. The Irishmen in those branches of the service read the reports and were eager to listen to the accounts of revolutionary progress from the lips of their countrymen engaged in the work. Of such was Boyle "Rally, a sabreur of the 10th Hussars at the time, and many hundreds of kindred spirits. Even the guards of the prison took the oath of American the cause, as for example when Stephens in a few days after his incarceration in Richmond prison, Dublin, toward the latter part of 1865, made his escape from that strong bastle, the people of two continents were astonished, but it was an easy problem in

A grand fair held in Chicago co-relative of the congress, netted some fifty thousand dollars. During 1884 the organization at home and abroad was increasing in numbers and force. Another convention was called at Cincinnati, and held there January 1885. This body authorized the issuance of bonds the name of "The Irish Republic," the meantime for a specific number experienced American army officers was called for and to report in Ireland.

Four went from Boston, viz.: Lieutenant Colonel John O'Connor, of the 1st Massachusetts Infantry; Captain W. Burke, of the 9th Massachusetts Infantry; Major Matthews, an experienced artillerist of Milford, and Captain Hugh Maguinness, of the regular army cavalry service, a resident of Belmont, Mass.

The Impatience in the 1833 Council has shaped into opposition to O'Mahoney, with its attendant intrigue, became potent for the work of ruin during '95, and it was necessary to hold a Congress at Philadelphia in the fall to avert the rifts of the division during a prolonged session of ten days because more viable and the party of the "Union to Canada" stood out in bolder relief. Shortly after the adjournment an open rupture took place and William R. Roberts, a New York merchant, was elected President of the Ontario branch, and the Ontario branch was numbered with another, since it was called by O'Mahoney and the "Union to New York" city, January 1896.

Previously word reached America of the arrest of Stephens. It was considered that he had been taken in order to show the world one phase of the power. He was released by a force headed by Colonel Thomas Kelly, of the Ohio Volunteers, and a section remained several days subsequently in Dublin, and then via England and Scotland retired to France. He was obliged to use the power he held over the promised uprising and to detach hundreds of officers from the ranks of the United States Army in the Union being over—went to Ireland and England. There were a thousand organized officers in Dublin City. There were a thousand in other parts of the country.
