That women have gone back to high, in some instances to hignest, heeled shoes is a fact evident to all who note the ways of fashion leaders. High heels in the house are the rule rather than the exception. High heels on the afternoon promenade are seen nearly as commonly as trains, while for evening use the elevated heel is an almost indispensable badge of fashion. Toes are inclined to round. being less extreme than those of last year without at all approaching the toothpick variety. Many women think them more sensible than the "commonsense"sort itself, because less extreme. They are cut lower at the back and sides than formerly; as much as about the sharp sides and backs of our tan and black ties that the manufacturers heard our cries and gooduaturedly cut all our shoes down this T88T.

A pretty way in which a barb is used is around a little yoke which is cut down square in front, like the oldfashioned square neck that was seen so much at one time. The barb is carried around the neck in the back, and outlines the yoke in the front, being caught with a little fold once or twice and is fastened at the left-hand corner of the square, where the ends are simply crossed. The lace is real, not rarticularly fine, but showy.

A pretty little pale blue English separate waist has a pretty variety of the undersleeve. There is a flaring cuff slashed on either side, which comes down almost to the wrist, and inside this is the pretty little undersleeve of fine tucked muslin and lace insertion. There is a band made of three tucks on either side of a strip of the insersertion. The undersieeve is short and droops well over the band. The cuff and a band which outlines the yoke of the walst is of corn-colored slik with white silk cord and black silk thread embroidery.

Linen and cotton are combined with many handsome silk gowns. A pretty little corn-colored silk bodice has collar and cuffs of white linen, with ap-plications of black velvet. Embroidered cream batiste is charming for chemisettes and yokes with slik or cotton gowns of contrasting shades.

"Nid d'Abeilles," nest of bees, is the name of a pretty printed silk up town. It has a basket weave and comes chiefly in blue and white, stylish designs something on the order of foulards, and is thirty-five cents a yard. It is only twenty-one inclues wide, but it will make up into charming gowns and is worth while.

they see some political reasons for his overthrow. Senator Hanna was paired against. Quay, with Senator Depew who would have voted for him. The result would therefore have been the same if both had voted. But it is bu-lleyed that if the administration had desired it, another vote sould have been secured for the secting of the Pennsylvania leader. The friends of the Senator now point to the results of the Republican State convention, which Mr. Quey had in his control as a home vindication.» It is certain that Mr. Quay will not retire from pelities at this time.
