POLITICAL LEADERS PREPARING FOR A GREAT BATTLE.

Busy Times at Headquarters-Campaign Not Far Advanced - Gubnatorial Candi dates - The Shirt-waist Man and Others -Paratial Residences.

The campaign for the election of a President, and the control of the greatest government in the world is beginning to feel the touch of the master hand of the great leaders. The national headquarters of the Republican party is in full operation, and is visited daily by the chairman of the committee, Senator Hanna. The senator comes up from Long Branch every morning and remains in the city shortness of funds.

The campaign on both sides dees not appear to be as well advanced now as it was this time of the year four years ago Early in August both parties had held immense ratification meetings in Madison Square Garden in 1896 and Bryan had made his famous entry into what he then termed the enemy's country. All this indicates a disposition on the part of the managers to postpone the most active work of the canvass until the weather becomes more endurable. In 1896, Mr. Bryan spoke to twenty thousand people in the big Garden when the mercury was sailing about the one hundred mark and there was not only the greatest discomfort experienced by his auditors but a number were overcome by the intense heat. Such effects as these induce the managers to believe that the first of September is time enough to have the speaking in full sway.

Chairman McGuire. Chairman McGuire is one of the busiest men in town. He believe that he has settled many of the misunderstandings that existed and that he will now soon have the leaders all working harmoniously and most vigorously for the success of the ticket. The chairman of the executive committee is an enthusiast himself, and he always inspires his associates with his vigor and earnestness. The Democratic Stat Committee is to make a speaking campaign, which is contrary to the advice of many of the old leaders. But McGuire is in the saddle, and his views will prevail in the

To the real Anarchist a republic is no better than a despotism. Their strange ideas of society without organized government Flames come and floods come, are even seizing upon the minds of the young, and a handsome young Italian girl of twenty, was interviewed the other day, who confessed that she was an Anarchist of the most pronounced type. She was not prepared to say that she would herself take life, but she fully justified the murlives which many of these people live, and their surroundings, all seem to add flames to the fire of Anarchy which is perhaps the most insane and dangerous of all political heracies.

Gradually I had squandered everything I possessed, but even in the face of bankruptcy itself I did not regret my folly until the change in Vera's nature began to show itself.

"The first wish of hers that I was obliged to thwart from lack of funds brought forth a shower of tears that nearly drove me to distraction. The second refusal deluged me in a perfect storm of reproaches and bitter words, and the last time that I was forced to deny her some costly gem the turned upon me with a brazen face and said she would have her way.

"I was horrified at this avowalmade, as I was obliged to admit, with the practiced sang-froid of an adventuress; but when she appeared before me a few days later, with a costly pin flashing in her golden hair, there was nothing left for me but to protect my honor before it was destroyed entirely.

"I gave her half of what was left and then absented myself from home to spare myself the pain of parting. I never attempted to secure a divorce. The whole thing was too bitterly painful, and the next hing I heard of Vera was that she was seen always wih a Count de Siri in Paris."

"How many diamonds have you now, sweetheart?" I said, laughingly. for I dreaded to hurt her feelings, atter all.

More than the Countess Georges, and almost as many as the Duchess of Wontshire, she responded quickly and with flashing eyes. I was completely astonished by her unexpected answer. "Then you must have jewels that I have not seen," I responded, "for the countess' are valued at five thousand, and the duchess has the finest collection in all Paris." Leila blushed scarlet and bit her lips angrily, as if to punish them for telling tales. "I-I had some given me long ago," she said timidly. I never told you of them because I did not know how you would feel about it, when I was quite a child," she added, They were given me by an old admirer with an attempt at candor. "And now you wish this bracelet," said, coldly, for I was beginning to feel sick at heart, and the horror of my friend's fatal experience seemed duplicating itself in mine.

"Yes, please Phillip," my wife said brightly. "I must have that bracelet: for it is the only one of its kind in "You will have to do without the

"Is it possible that I have married a pauper?" she hissed between her sharp, white teeth. I selzed my hat and left the room, and the next day, wihout consulting my wife in any particular, I engaged passage and prepared to return with her to my native town. There was nothing further said between us regarding the bracelet or her insulting words, but before leaving Paris I wired Jack Townsend to meet me at Liverpool, and as we slowly backed into place by the narrow wharf the first face that I recognized among the crowd was the friendly one of my chum, as he swung his hat hilariously in an honest welcome home.

I hurried down the gangway with Leila directly behind, but just as I reached Jack's side and extended my ished to see him turn suddenly pale, and, with one furious glance at my lovely wife, spring hastily into a waiting cab and drive away without speaking to either one of us.

In a moment the whole terrible truth was revealed to me with merciless plainness. I glanced at my wifemine or Jack's, I knew not whichand read confirmation of the truth in the bold indifference that seemed suddenly to be stamped on her lovely
