Tim Woodruff as the farmers' candidate for governor is one of the jokes of the political year.

We notice a great scramble among certain democrats to get on the band wagon.

The window glass manufacturers of the United States have held their annual convention and raised the price of glass 10 per cent. Strange as it may appear it is no easier to smash the glass trust than any other.

Senator Morgan insists that there are several paramount issues this year. This is a good deal like the man who said that one man was just as good as another and a hanged sight better.

The Russian Ambassador to China, M. DeGiers, will have the pleasure when he gets home of reading how he was boiled in a big kettle and his bones used as drumsticks.

The steamship Deutschland, is certainly the greyhound of the Atlantic Ocean. It holds the record both ways and seems bent on chopping off a few hours on every trip. We may soon take breakfast in New York and supper in Cork. Who knows!

We think it might be a good thing for the democrats of this state if Hill and Croker would both go to China and agree to fight to a finish. The victor to join the Boxers and take a front part and await the allied forces.

The mayor has appointed James D. Casey to be commissioner of public safety, since James G. Cutler resigned. The new commissioner will have a great opportunity and his friends hope he will not suffer in comparison with his predecessor who has done excellent work since he has held the office.

Senator Wellington of Maryland, says he was humiliated into voting to ratify the treaty of peace with Spain by President McKinley. He says the president induced him to vote for the ratification of the treaty "by leading me that it was not the intention of himself or the government to forcibly hold or acquire the Philippines. With that pledge I voted for the treaty without it I never should have done so." President McKinley has betrayed him.

CATHOLIC EDUCATION.

Cardinal Gibbons contributed to the current issue of the Catholic Mirror a short and most timely article on the importance of Catholic education. He says:

The education of youth is the engrossing topic of our times. The Supreme Head of the Catholic Church has sounded the keynote. He points out the necessity of daily Christian instruction as the only effectual safeguard for preserving the rising generation from dangers which imperil their faith and morals.

The bishops and clergy of Christendom re-echo the voice of the Holy Father. It may be safely asserted that the future status of Catholicity in the United States is to be determined by the success or failure of our day-schools and that the ratio of our Catholic population, in the coming generation will be in mathematical proportion to the number and patronage of our parochial institutions of learning.

The vital question of the day is not, "How shall we preserve the sheep of the fold?" but "How shall we shelter the lambs?" Shall they be poisoned by the unhealthy pastures which are so temptingly placed before them, or shall their tender souls be nourished under the guidance of those who are their divinely constituted shepherds? I am persuaded that the popular errors now existing in reference to education arises from an incorrect notion of that term. To educate, means to bring out, to develop the intellectual, moral and religious faculties of the soul.

An education, therefore which improves only the mind, to the neglect of moral and religious training is, at best but an imperfect and mutilated system. Even according to Webster's definition, to educate is to "instill into the mind principles of art, science, morals, religion and behavior." "To educate," he says, "in the arts, is important; in religion, indispensable."

God forbid that we should undervalue the importance and advantages of secular education, of which the Catholic Church has always been the fostering mother and munificent patroness. She founded and endowed the famous Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Paris, Padua, Bologna, and nearly all the other great universities of Europe. From the sixth to the sixteenth century, she labored with untiring zeal in establishing throughout Europe, free schools, for the education of the masses. "Ignorance," says Pope Benedict XIV, "is the source of all evil, above all, among the working classes."

Parents in having the minds of their children well stored with useful knowledge, bequeath to them a legacy far more precious than gold or silver. Young men who fall heirs to rich estates, but whose education is neglected, seldom reflect credit on their families or country. Their riches are too frequently a stumbling block in their way, an excuse for idleness, and an endless source of temptation.

Parents should endeavor, as far as circumstances allow, to secure for their children a solid and practical course of instruction, to develop their minds and hearts; to make them especially familiar with those branches of knowledge they are likely afterwards to pursue. Then they can go forth into the world, gifted with a well-furnished mind, and great confidence in God. They are armed with a lever by which they can elevate themselves in the social circle and become useful members of society.

Says the Messenger of the Sacred Heart, it is not generally known that the Society of the Holy Spirit, under whose auspices the session of the Catholic Winter School at New Orleans are held, has charge of the humble, yet not less meritorious work of providing schools and teachers for country missions. It also busies itself in distributing gratuitously Catholic books, tracts, leaflets and magazines. Within the last year a few zealous Catholic ladies have established the Sisterhood of the Holy Spirit to promote these and other worthy objects of kindred character.

Says the Pittsburg Observer, "The Bishop of Trenton does not belong to the timid 'don't-say-anything-about-it' band of white-livered Catholics. He believes in a manly effort to possess our Constitutional rights and in open opposition to any individual or any organization that endeavors to deprive us of what is justly ours. The majority of our Protestant neighbors will be with us when they know exactly what we object to and what we ask when they see how fair, moderate, just and lawful are our demands."

THE GOSPELS

GOSPEL: — August 26 — St. Luke x. 23-37. — Twelfth Sunday after Pentecost. — At that time, Jesus said to his disciples: "Blessed are the eyes that see the things which you see. For I say to you that many prophets and kings have desired to see the things that you see, and have not seen them, and to hear the things that your hear, and have not heard them. And behold a certain lawyer stood up, tempting him and saying: Master, what must I do to possess eternal life? But He said to him: What is written in the law? how readest thou? He answering, said: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with thy whole heart, and with thy whole soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind, and thy neighbor as thyself. And He said to him: Thou hast answered right: this do, and thou shalt live. But he, willing to justify himself, said to Jesus: And who is my neighbor? And Jesus answering, said: A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among robbers, who also stripped him, and having wounded him, went away, leaving him half dead. And it chanced that a certain priest went down the same way, and seeing him, passed by. In like manner also a Levite, when he was near the place and saw him, passed by. But a certain Samaritan, being on his journey, came near him, and seeing him, was moved with compassion; and going up to him, bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and setting him upon his own beast, brought him to an inn, and took care of him. And the next day he took out two pence, and gave to the host, and said: Take care of him; and whatsoever thou shalt spend over and above I at my return will repay thee. Which of these three in thy opinion was neighbor to him that fell among the robbers? But he said: He that showed mercy to him. And Jesus said to him: Go and do thou in like manner."

Of whom was the man who fell among robbers a figure? He was an image of the human race, which by disobedience fell from the state of grace into a state of sin. Jerusalem, the city of the Lord, built upon a mountain, represents the state of grace, and Jericho, a city built in a valley, represents the state of sin.
