Clarence P. Lodge

Clarence P. Lodge, the Republican nominee for superintendent of the poor, was born in Henrietta, forty-seven years ago, and has always been a resident of Monroe county. He was educated in the union schools of his native town, and worked his father's farm for a number of years after he attained manhood. He was appointed warden of the Monroe county almshouse by Superintendent McGonegal, and held that position until the year 1894, when he was unanimously nominated for the office from which Mr. McGonegal retired. Three years ago he was unopposedly re-nominated and re-elected.

During his term in office Mr. Lodge has given particular attention to investigating cases reported for relief, with a view to preventing patients being lodged on Monroe county who should be cared for by the neighboring counties or by other states, and by this precaution he has saved thousands of dollars to the county, and added to the amount which could be given to the really deserving poor of Monroe.

Mr. Lodge is a loyal and staunch republican, has often been a delegate to county and state conventions, and for several years represented the fourth ward in the county committee. He has also served as president of the New York Association of Superintendents of the poor.

The action taken by him two years ago in forming an association of the overseers of the poor for Monroe county has been a great saving to the county inasmuch as the associations concerted action in regard to enforcing the State Tramp act. This action alone cutting down the bill of the county at least 75 per cent. The association meets quarterly, so that each overseer may be in perfect touch with each other.

PART SECOND.

III.

"Frightened, probably, by what I said about the dogs," laughed Marie, "and she wants to get home before the fierce dogs arrive."

"Flee, Pete, flee for your life!" exclaimed the almost breathless child, as she unlocked the chapel door and entered. "Mr. Carlton has sent to Lennox for the blood-hounds and they will be here in two hours."

The frightened negro staggered from his hiding place and would have rushed out of the chapel but Marie calming herself said, "Wait, Pete, wait just a minute and let us ask Jesus and His Blessed Mother to protect you and save you from the dogs."

Like the majority of the Carlton slaves, Pete knew nothing of the Blessed Mother but little of Jesus, but he had heard of the Tong and Levimore slaves had been taught to worship God the same as white folks did. Had a pack of bloodhounds been at the door of the chapel to tear him to pieces he could not resist the plaintive voice of the angelic child who asked him to pray. Kneeling at the altar railing, he bowed his head in reverence more for his little companion than for the Divine Presence, of which he was ignorant, and repeated after her the Our Father and Hail Mary. For the time his danger was forgotten and he would have been content to have remained there for hours with her, feeling that in heaven there could be no brighter spirit, but she arose and whispered, "Come, Pete, there is no time to waste."

They were at the door now and calling to her pony she bade him mount it and ride to the place where the woods was on the river bank. "Leave Gipsy there," she said "and I will be down after her."

"No, little missy, it's too much and I rader be cotched dan take your nice pony."

"You must, for I believe you will be killed if you are caught, and handing him her mother of pearl rosary added, "Here take this to remember me by and ask Our Blessed Mother to take care of you."

"No, missy, a poor nigger like me don't want such nice things, dey's only fit for little white han's like you. Won't you let me kiss you instead?"

"Yes, if you will promise to keep the beads."

He kissed her soft white cheek and said "You's an angel missy, to do so much for a poor runaway nigger."

"No, I am not, for I am only doing what mamma would wish me too. I heard her say once that she would be willing to give her life to save a poor slave, and I would, too."

The sweet innocent child realized not what she was saying, but her words were heard in heaven and her sacrifice was accepted.

Down through the fields towards the woods the fleeing man sped on Marie's pet pony. As we will not hear from him again, suffice it to tell here what became of him. Leaving the little animal he sprang into the river and swam to the opposite shore where a little canoe belonging to one of the Tone slaves lay moored. The owner was near by and as soon as he learned the young man's story he told him to take it and lose no time in reaching the Ohio river which was many miles away. Well nigh exhausted and with blistered hands, he, at length, reached the free shore of Ohio; but, as he had been told, there had been no time to lose for he had been closely pursued by a savage hound, and with only a half hour's delay he would have been captured. Only half an hour, how precious each moment had been to him, but he never knew the price that others had paid for that short half hour. After many weary days he found himself in Canada, and there in a Catholic city, was given an opportunity, not only to cultivate natural talents, which his bondage had hiterto hidden, but learned the truths of the strange religion which caused a child to say that she would be willing to give up her life to save a slave. He became a most devout Catholic as well as an honest and upright citizen of Quebec, where he remained until the first rumor of the war between the North and South reached him when he returned to fight for the freedom of his race. He fell in one of the first battles from a shell which had shattered his right leg, and with little Marie's rosary clasped in his fingers, and a smile on his dusky face, they found him dead the next morning.

With a heart in which was mingled joy for having helped a poor slave escape, and fear lest he might be captured, Marie started down to the woods to bring back the pony. She had not seen old Dora, who, half hidden behind Alice Tone's tombstone had watched her, blessing the child for her noble act which was just what her dear mother would have done, nor did she hear the old creature as she murmured, "Dat chile am too good to stay in this wicked world! an I fear she'll soon take wings and fly away like de two Miss Alice's did."

"Come Gipsy, said Marie, as she entered the forest; her pet came bounding toward her. She patted him gently on the head and led him to a little clearing a few yards wide, where she could watch the fugitive who was now in the boat near the opposite shore. While Gipsy grazed she knelt down on the grass to pray for the man's safety, keeping her eyes fixed upon him. A bend in the river hid him from view. "My dear Mother, help him," she murmured just as the fierce baying of a hound fell upon her ear.

The negro hunter with a fierce blood hound, accompanied by Mr. Brown, Mr. Carlton's overseer had reached the chapel and was about to enter when old Dora sprang forward and commanded the men not to go in there as that was too sacred a place for such as them.

"Who are you, asked the stranger flourishing his riding whip over her head. "If you don't mind your own business, I'll kill you."

"Touch me if you dar'" she exclaimed, "I belong to de Tone's an my nass' don't let his slaves be whipped." Mr. Brown knew better than to allow one of Frank Tone's slaves to be interfered with, so he said quietly, "One of our men is missing and I wish to look in the chapel to see if he is here."

"That is no use," said the old woman who knew that the dogs could not be turned off their track and wished to make a heroine of the little miss. "He ain't dar. I seen Missy Marie gib him her white pony and tell him to flee."

Mr. Brown had met Marie on her way to Mr. Carlton's that morning. He was going to report Pete's disappearance to his master and he had stopped to look admiringly after her, thinking that she was one of the most beautiful creatures he had ever seen, but he had not imagined that one so small and fairy-like could help a slave escape.

The dog was now bounding wildly across the fields over the path Pete had taken and the two men on horseback started in hot pursuit. Into the forest he plunged; a cry of terror fell upon their ears which caused the two men to rein their horses and Mr. Brown sprang to the ground to see what the trouble was; almost instantly there was a splash in the water followed by another. Had it been the voice of a man, the blood might have boiled more hotly in their savage hearts; for, then they would have been assured that they had their victim. But not was the voice of a child chilled their burning hearts.

Terrified by the sight of the huge animal which she feared would tear her in pieces, Marie had plunged into the river followed by the dog, which, instead of harming her, had enough of noble instinct to try to save her. Once she sank and when the two men reached the river bank her white dress was disappearing beneath the dark waters for the second time. "Bring her here, Maj," yelled the dog's master, but the animal needed no urging and the second time she arose he grabbed her skirts and brought her to the shore.

"She's dead," said Mr. Brown, forgetting the object of their pursuit.

"Who is she and what shall we do?"

"Do take her home at once, of course. She is the child of Mr. Tone, who owns this place and we must try and save her if life remains."

"But remember our man."

With an oath, Mr. Brown exclaimed "never mind our man. I don't care if every negro from the Carlton plantation escapes, Marie Tone's death must not be on our hands. Here, carry her, I hav'n't strength enough left and come with me to the house." So saying he putting her dripping form into the arms of the man.

Just half an hour the men lost in going back to the house with their precious burden, and in that half hour, as I have stated before, Peter accomplished his escape.

Little Marie was not dead, although appearances indicated that she was when they laid her on the couch in the parlor. Her mother fainted, and her father unable to move, sat motionless at her side, while the excited servants were worse than useless. Father Levimore alone had enough presence of mind to do anything, and when he discovered that the child's heart was beating he tried to restore her to consciousness; but with the united efforts of himself and the physician who soon arrived it seemed a fruitless task, and it was several days ere she recognized anyone. The fright, together with the plunge into the cold water when she was over-heated, had brought on a burning fever during which she talked a great deal of Pete and the blood hounds, asking of everyone if he had been caught and begging them not to let the big dog kill her.

COOK OPERA HOUSE.

Cook Opera House is always cozy. The bills are excellent. Cook Opera House is the proper place for ladies and children and laughter served in a wholesome manner. Through all the season of the year whether the sun beats down with enervating effect or whether winter's wintry blasts pierce the shivering theatre-goers to the marrow, Cook Opera House is always crowded with enthusiastic audiences. Why is this? The average unacquainted person will enquire. The answer simply is that the superb bill presented each week is always scrumptious. It is true, at times, that one week's entertainment, collectively speaking, may be strictly better than another, but it nevertheless is a fixed fact that every number must be good or it would not be tolerated by Manager Moore. Unusual interest is manifested in the forthcoming appearance of the distinguished actress, Miss Marie Wainwright who recently made her successful debut in vaudeville. This great star has been secured by Manager Moore at an extraordinary large salary and will appear here with her own select supporting company next Monday in her latest production entitled "Lady Dye's Escapade," written for her by Justin Huntly McCarthy, and is admitted by the best critic in New York to be one of the most charming presentations ever seen on any stage. The coming production will be given here with the same cast and adjuncts which marked the engagements at the Fifth Avenue theatre, New York, the past week and Rochester society will have an opportunity of seeing the star queen of vaudeville, and Cook Opera House should certainly be crowded during Miss Wainwright's engagement. Many other important high-class cardinal features of much attractiveness, which embraces Miss Clarence Vance, the sprightly sunny south singer, with a con dialect that is simply perfect. The Oriskany Trio, is said to be the three cleverest acrobats that ever came from Europe and their performances is new and marvelous throughout and since their arrival in this country are in great demand. Joe Bonnell, eccentric monologue artist, in a repertoire of new and original songs and sayings. The gifted Carmen Sisters, in their select and classic operatic banjo numbers, John and Etta Gilroy are four experts in something new and amusing in the way of character experiments. The great Lazelle, has a new patent ariel device and accomplishes many hazardous feats in mid-air which is entirely new and performed by him alone. James and Bonnie Farley, favorite farceurs, in their newest specialties, and several other good cards are the attractions for the coming week, when Prof. Joe Monk will play Choppins' favorite Polnaise in minor C, fills out what looks like an excellent strong bill with two performances daily, matinee and evening. Next week James O. Barrows, John Lancaster & Co., in "Tactics" are the chief magnets.

The Baker Theatre.

Another week of big attractions is announced made by the Baker theatre management for the week of Oct. 8th.

The first half of the week will be occupied by a magnificent production of Lewis Morrison's "Faust" as the final appearance of this most noteworthy production. This season marks the eighteenth year of this success, still one would think that it was but just entering the dramatic field so keen is the interest manifested and so liberal the patronage it enjoys. It is promised that it will be produced on a grander and better scale than ever before. The usual matinees will be given on Tuesday and Wednesday, and the sale of seats is now on.

One of the most original plays produced in America in years will be the attraction the last half of the week at the Baker with matinees on Thursday and Saturday. It is one of Charles E. Blaney's latest successes and is an sensational melodrama entitled "King of the Opium Ring."

Mother Mary Agnes Goes Abroad.

Mother Mary Agnes, the venerable superior of Nazareth Convent, accompanied by Sister M. Marcella and Sister M. Ermans, will leave Rochester on Sunday morning next for New York city. They will sail on the following Wednesday on the Teutonic for Ireland. They will spend about four months in Ireland and England, devoting their time to visiting the principal convents and examining their methods of education.
