that holy St. who, with her good sister and father, became converts under St. Praxedis and her sister St. Pudenciana washed the bleeding wounds of hundreds of holy martyrs.

This church also contains three of the thorns from the Saviour's crown and a relic of the column at which he was scourged.

Two pious women viewed these precious monuments at the same time as we and asked the priest who was conducting us, to place their rosaries against the glass enclosure of the emblems.

He did so and handed them back wherupon the devout pilgrims who, we think, had come all the way from France to see them kissed the rosaries fervently and then prostrated themselves, face downwards, upon the pavement in front of the thorns.

In the beautiful little church of St. Pudenciana, sister of Praxedis, we were shown the very table upon which St. Peter first celebrated "mass."

Both of these churches are very old and contain precious colored pictures of Christ, the Apostles, and the saints in mosaic; inlaid work of tiny blocks of colored stone on a gold colored background dating from the fifth century. A. D.

Holy Tuesday there were the Stations of the Cross at St. Prisca's on the Aventine. This church is celebrated as being "built" upon the spot occupied by the Domestic Church mentioned by St. Paul in his Epistles.

Holy Wednesday we witnessed the most solemn exercises in the large pilgrim church of Santa Maria Maggiore. The "Tenebrae" were chanted by the brethren in great sadness and unaccompanied by the organ.

At the end of each of these fourteen palms of lamentation, one of the candles on the triangular candle-stick was extinguished leaving only the fifteenth or top most one burning.

These fourteen candles I suppose you know are said to represent the twelve apostles and the two Marys while the fifteenth represents the Saviour—the light of the world.

After the "Tenebrae" or lamentations, the "Benedictus" was sung and, one by one at the end of every second verse the six candles on the altar were extinguished. Then all the lights of the vast church put out, leaving only the single candle on the top of the triangular candle stick still burning.

This, too, was removed in a moment and placed under the left or Epistle side of the altar. Then, of course, the whole church was in utter darkness just as the world was the day the Saviour was put to death on the cross. Then followed the singing of the "Miserere" in woe and lamentation and at its close there ensued a loud rumbling to represent the confusion of nature when Christ breathed out his life that dreadful day in Jerusalem. Of course this was all very impressive as was also the reappearance of the lighted candle to typify the resurrection from the dead.

An exchange printed the following about her. It is said that the local management has received many letters of approval of the act from clergymen and other religious workers, who declare that the influence of the act is an enabling one, and at the same time praising its dramatic and scenic beauty.

The bill includes a number of other clever acts. Falk and Seamon are comedians and musicians. Hal Davis and Inez Macaulay will present a new sketch called "The Unexpected." The three Livingstons do difficult acrobatic stunts with marionettes which train the Ozon brothers are barrel jumpers.

Jessie Couthi is a clever monologist. Artie Hall, "The genuine Georgia girl" is well known to the Cook patrons. Her new work is in white face. The Glocks are baton manipulators, and the Browning sisters call themselves duettists.

BAKER THEATRE. The popularity won by the Baker Theatre Stock Company since the opening of its present season is bound to be advanced several points next week when its fifth meritorious bill will be Owen Davis' latest play "Between Love and Duty."

Its production next week means its first presentation on the stage, and it will be built for use next season when it will be taken on the road and played in the best price houses of the country. For this reason the production will be exceptionally complete and complete one.

"Between Love and Duty" tells a story of most absorbing interest, and deals with the lives of two brothers, one in the service of the Northern army and the other in the Southern, during the Civil war. It is a play of powerful and intensely interesting scenes and the whole gamut of comedy and pathos is played upon by the very interesting characterization of the drama. Passion and romance and life are illustrated most forcibly by the author. That "Between Love and Duty" will be given an admirable presentation by the Baker Stock Company can be safely relied upon.

Captains of Industry. A series which should have been named "The Enchantments of our Modern Aladdin," if considered solely from the point of view of romance, is begun in the May Cosmopolitan. But these sketches possess as well a business interest equally for clerk and capitalist for manufacturer, farmer and merchant.

The man who would understand the drift of news in finance and business must read these lives, so full of incident, of chance, of hard labor and marvelous success. As it is, the series receives only the common place name of "Captains of Industry."

Each character is treated by a noted writer familiar with his subject.

Alfred Noble and Dynamite. This great inventor, the son of a Swedish inventor, was a man of great daring and extreme sensitiveness, due, it is believed, to physical ill-health.

While his dynamite was trusted he did the most reckless things with it, rigging a quantity of the dangerous substance, for instance, out of a cask with a knife; yet "he was particularly susceptible to headaches caused by bringing nitroglycerin into contact with the skin; they affected him so violently that he was often obliged to lie down on the ground in the mine or quarry in which he was experimenting."

He was a man of vast reading and much poetic feeling, being, moreover so meticulous that he never could find a wife whom he thought up to his intellectual level.

He was deeply disappointed by not being made a Fellow of the Royal Society, and had we gathered, in his nature an element of whimsicality which his great wealth, not all made from dynamite, for he was at Baku a great petroleum dealer, enabled him to gratify.

"Being very nervous, and tiring of the pictures around him, he had made an arrangement with one of the largest picture dealers in Paris by which he could select any picture he liked and have them hung on his walls. As soon as he was tired of one set he sent them back to the dealer and selected others in their stead."

He was the inventor of cordite, and died in 1906 at the age of 67, leaving his huge fortune to the education of scientific instruction.
